From the Georgia Journal.

At the last term of the Superior Court indicted for the murder of her illegitition, she was found guilty of only concealing the death of her child, and was sentenced to imprisonment. The following are the remarks delivered by Judge Longstreet, previous to pronouncing the sentence of the law :

of concealing the death of an illegitimate son. Mr. De Witt Clinton was opposchild, and I have summoned you before me to hear the sentence which the law pronounces upor your crime. Upon this occasion inble to those of your sex who may become ac-quainted with your history. It is not my wish to embitter your griefs or to insult your misfortunes. No one within the reach of my members of Congress for consultation ? voice, feels more tender sympathies for you, than he who e painful duty it is to pronounce Monroe. Mr. Adams, nevertheless, the punishment that awaits you. I have observed the timidity with which you met the rude gaze of the multitude when you were brought before me : I have seen your trem- being re-elected unanimously. bling hand-your agitated frame-and the Why was there a caucus in 1824 ?fast rolling tears that trickled down your Because there were more candidates grief-worn cheek, during the progress of your rial. These have convinced me that guilt has not yet obliterated all the finer feelings of your nature. They are faithful witnesses tify the female character still linger with you, as operative in 1824 as in 1800, 1804, and have exacted for you the tribute of pity. from every tender bosom. You have experienced the folly of sin, you have seen how brittle is the cord that binds woman to society-how rapidly she is precip- choice to the people. When the reason itated into ruin, when once she quits her hold on virtue-how naturally crime treads in the 1820, no nomination was made by cau footsteps of crime-and how swift the wing of punishment s in pursuit of guilt. In an evil hour, you sarrendered your honor to some vile seducer. Perhaps you were won by his soft blandishments, his warm persuaions, his ciple." read this recital and reconcile fervent professions, and perhaps, after having their consistency, if they can. rifled you of all that endeared you to the world, he now mingles with the throng that has gathered round you to witness your disgrace, and views your sorrows with cold and cruel indifference. That he has abandoned you to the consequences of your crime is most true. The first effect of your fault has been to feel the stings of man's treachem and ingratitude. But you were soon to becrime was of a character that defied conceal- pitch of wild uproar, that the congrement, and keen must have been your anguish, as you watched its slow but certain developement. The time at length arrive ! when your infamy must be disclosed to an illiberal world; yet still you fostered the delusive hope that desk, fell on his knees, and with much you might escape its reproaches. My own feeling and fine taste repeated, feelings will scarcely permit me to rehearse this part of your melancholy story, and yet they must give me but faint conceptions of what were yours at this momentous crisis. I saw you retiring from every human eye to the bosom of a solitary wood, there to endure the pangs which your errors brought upon you, with no hand to help you but that of the God whom you had offended, and no voice to sooth you, but the whispers of the wind a mong the branches that covered you. I saw von rise from the ground; on which you had languished, a mother ; lift your lifeless babe from its leafy bed, and bear it with trembling limbs and butsting heart to the enclosed spot you selected for its interment. Here behold you delving with feeble efforts and waning on the full organ. in a style of pious 25 Boxes Favetteville Mould Candles, strength, to hide your offspring from the fangs of dogs and the beaks of vultures. Oh, that the author of all your misery and woe, could have seen you at this trying moment Oh, that he could have beheld this heart-rending conflict between a mother's fondness and ed through the windows to the enrapa maiden's shame ! If within his guilty bosom | tured assembly, a magnificent and brilthere slumbered one tender feeling, it would liant arch of peace. The preacher re-

you) offended, and he holds suspended over suddenly rushed upon him with a loud that which his humble creature is now about to pronounce upon you. But he has pointed out to you an easy mode by which his wrath may be averted. Let me recommend to you then to close with his terms, and you may yet know peace, pure as that of innocence itself, and lasting as eternity.

From the Washington City Gazette. CAUCUSSES.

Why was a Caucus held in 1800? Because there was more than one candidate. John Adams was opposed to Thomas Jefferson.

Why was a caucus held in 1804? for Putnam county, Mary Holliday was Because the federalists intended, by throwing their votes into the vice-premate child. After a patient investiga- sidential scale, to deprive Mr. Jefferson of a re-election to the Presidency.

Why was a caucus held in 1808 i Because there was more than one candidate. Mr. Monroe and Mr. George Clinton were opposed to Mr. Madison.

Why was a caucus held in 1812? Mary Holliday, you have been convicted To ensure the re-election of Mr. Mad. to Mr. Madison.

you a sentence far, far more dreadful than shout. He was so astounded by the shock that he was struck almost senseless : he staggered, fell, and fainted away. The current of his blood seemed for some time arrested, and his pulsation ceased. He was taken up and conveyed home ; delirium ensued ; and madness followed, which has ever since continued without abatement, to a degree not only pitiable, but dangerous to all who approached him.
