One of the greatest pests that ever afflicted the moral world, is prejudice, or a strong bias of the mind, against a person, formed without evidence of merit or demerit, and influencing our opinions and conduct in al! the relative duties of life. It is an evil so universally felt and so interwoven with our education and dispositions, that no person is willing to allow that he possesses an undue share of it. True however it is, that some persons do indulge themselves in imbibing these strong preindices and in evincing their strength by their baneful effects. Some of the any Postmaster shall neglect to render his most probable causes of prejudice are accounts for one month after the time, and the force of education, ignorance of the in the form and manner prescribed by law, world, self-confidence and a want of charity.
