

BUNKER HILL.

The Address delivered by Mr. Webster at Bunker Hill, has just been published by Cummings & Hilliard of Boston. We should be happy to publish the whole address, but the very liberal price ($600) which the publishers paid to the Monument Association, for the copy right, forbids us enriching our columns, at their expense. We will only add as a specimen of its style, two extracts—in the first of which, the orator describes the particular object of the Association—the second, is a beautiful apostrophe to the General:

"The society, whose organ I am, was formed for the purpose of rearing some honorable and durable monument to the memory of the early friends of American Independence. They have thought, that for this object no time could be more propitious, than the present prosperous and peaceful period; that no place could claim preference over this memorable spot; and that no day could be more auspicious to the undertaking, than the anniversary of the battle which was here fought. The foundation of that monument we have now laid—With solemnities suited to the occasion, with prayers to Almighty God for his blessing, and in the midst of this cloud of witnesses, we have begun the work. We trust it will be prosecuted; and that springing from a broad foundation, rising high in massive solidity and undimmed grandeur, it may remain, as long as Heaven permits the works of man to last, a fit emblem, both of the events in memory of which it is raised, and of the gratitude of those who have reared it.

We know, indeed, that the record of illustrious actions is most safely deposited in the universal remembrance of mankind. We know, that if we could cause this structure to ascend, not only till it reached the skies, but till it pierced them, its broad surface could still contain but part of that, which, in an age of knowledge hath already been spread over the earth, and which history charges itself with making known to all future times. We know, that no inscription on entablatures less broad than the earth itself, can carry information of the events we commemorate, where it has not already gone; and that no structure which shall not outlive the duration of letters and knowledge among men, can prolong the memorial. But our object is, by this edifice to show, our own deep sense of the value and importance of the achievements of our ancestors; and, by presenting this work of gratitude to the eye, to keep alive similar sentiments, and to foster a constant regard for the principles of the Revolution. Human beings are composed not of reason only, but of imagination also, and sentiment; and that is neither wasted nor misapplied, which is appropriated to the purpose of giving right direction to sentiments, and opening proper springs of feeling in the heart. Let it not be supposed that our object is to perpetuate national hostility, or even to cherish a mere military spirit—it is higher, purer, nobler. We consecrate our work to the spirit of national independence, and we wish that the light of peace, may rest upon it forever. We rear a memorial of our conviction of that unmeasured benefit, which has been conferred on our land, and of the happy influences, which have been produced, by the same events, on the general interests of mankind. We come as Americans, to mark a spot, which must forever be dear to us and our posterity. We wish, that whosoever, in all coming time, shall turn his eye hither, may behold that the place is not extinguished, where the first great battle of the Revolution was fought. We wish, that this structure may proclaim the magnitude and importance of that event, to every class and every age. We wish that infancy may learn the purpose of its erection from maternal lips, and that weary and withered age may behold it, and be soled by the recollections which it suggests. We wish, that labor may look up here, and be proud in the midst of its toil. We wish, that in those days of disaster, which, as they come on all nations, must be expected to come on us also, desponding patriotism may turn its eyes hitherward, and be assured that the foundations of our national power still stand strong. We wish, that this column, rising towards heaven among the pointed spires of so many temples dedicated to God, may contribute also to produce, in all minds a pious feeling of dependence & gratitude. We wish finally, that the last object on the sight of him who leaves his native shore, and the first to gladden his who revisits it, may be something which shall remind him of the liberty and the glory of his country. Let it rise, till it meet the sun in his coming; let the earliest light of the morning gild it; and parting day linger and play on its summit."

Sir, we are assembled to commemorate the establishment of great public principles of liberty, and do honor to the distinguished dead. The occasion is too severe for eulogy to the living.

But, sir, your interesting relation to this country, the peculiar circumstances which surround you and surround us, call on me to express the happiness which we derive from your presence and aid in the solemn commemoration.

Fortunate, fortunate man! with what measure of devotion will you not thank God, for the circumstances of your extraordinary life! You are connected with both hemispheres and with two generations. Heaven saw fit to ordain, that the electric spark of Liberty should be conducted, through you, from the new world to the old; and we who are now here to perform this duty of patriotism, have all of us long ago received it in charge from our fathers to cherish your name and your virtues. You will account it an instance of your good fortune, sir, that you crossed the seas to visit us at a time which enables you to be present at this solemnity. You now behold the field, the renown of which reached you in the heart of France, and caused a thrill in your garden bosom. You see the lines of the little redoubt thrown up by the incredible diligence of Prescott; and defended, to the last extremity, by his lion hearted valor; and within which the corner stone of our monument has now taken its position. You see where Warren fell, and where Parker, Gardner, McCleary, Moore, and other early patriots fell with him. Those who survived that day, and whose lives have been prolonged to the present hour, are now around you. Some of them you have known in the trying scenes of the war. Behold! they now stretch forth their feeble arms to embrace you. Behold! they raise their trembling voices to invoke the blessings of God on you, and yours, forever.

Sir, you have assisted us in laying the foundation of this edifice. You have heard us rehearse with our feeble commendation, the names of departed patriots. Sir, monuments and eulogy belong to the dead. We give them this day to Warren and his associates. On other occasions they have been given to your more immediate companions in arms, to Washington, to Greene, to Gates, Sullivan and Lincoln. Sir, we have become reluctant to grant these, our highest and last honors, further. We would gladly hold them yet back from the little remnant of that immortal band. Seruis in celum redeas.—Illustrious as are your merits, yet far, oh, very far distant be the day, when any inscription shall bear your name, or any tongue pronounce your eulogy.

AERIAL VOYAGE.

The New-York papers are filled with details, relative to the ascension of Mr. Robertson of Paris, in a balloon from Castle Garden, on the 9th inst. before an immense concourse of spectators. The following particulars are from the National Advocate:

During the four hours occupied in filling the balloon, the company crowded into the garden in one continual stream. Towards seven o'clock the carriage of Gen. Lafayette and suite made its appearance at the outskirts of the crowd on the Battery. A shout of gratulation was then raised and prolonged until it reached the very centre of the garden. The carriages made their way slowly to the gate of the Castle, on which the venerable man dismounted and walked along the draw-bridge to the inner entrance. Near the bridge he stopped for a few minutes, and bowed with condescension to the crowd on either side, which immediately increased their rapture to a deafening peal. On entering the Garden, he was received with the same overwhelming welcome, and while he proceeded to the canopy prepared for his reception, the air rang with the shouts of the mingled thousands which filled the place.

As soon as Lafayette was seated Mr. Robertson hastened the process of filling the balloon. The acids and the water were thrown into the casks; the gas poured forth in constant jets and escaped into the reservoir; and the balloon rose up and poised itself on the circumambient air. The aeronaut then appeared dressed in a species of French uniform and a chapeau decorated with lace. In a few minutes, preparations were made to attach the car to the cords, and to place there the couple of flags which he was to carry to the upper regions with him. This was soon accomplished and in about half an hour after seven o'clock, the enterprising traveller of the air ascended the car, and announced that all was ready for his departure to the upper regions. Standing in the car, he then sailed round the interior of the Garden, and approaching the canopy under which Gen. Lafayette stood, made a respectful bow to the veteran hero and gave him to understand his readiness for departure. At this moment every eye in the Garden was intently directed to one spot, and the interest now excited was astonishing. The word was accordingly given, and the aeronaut ascended from the eastern side of the garden, in the most majestic and imposing style. He rose gradually amidst the shouts of the spectators, but as he ascended, the balloon rolled its side against the flag-staff by which it was whirled once or twice as it rose. In rising over the western roof of the ball room, the car almost came in contact with one of the lamp posts. Having cleared this obstruction he was seen by the multitudes on the battery and the surrounding eminences, who hailed him with the most incessant shouts of applause. As the balloon was suspended over the water between the western extremity of the garden and the wharf of the Philadelphia steam boat, it appeared to descend or at least to remain in equilibrium, upon which he disengaged himself from the flag-staff, and in the hurry he lost his hat. Some say he flung it away; this however could not be distinctly ascertained from the garden. The balloon then arose anew with great grandeur and effect. Its course was the best which could have been for it went directly over the whole city of New-York, from South to North. The evening was beautiful in the extreme, and the wind which had been pretty high during the afternoon, moderated to a gentle breeze. He took the direction to Long Island, and about half an hour after his departure, became invisible to the spectators of Castle Garden.

The immense number of spectators out on this occasion was truly astonishing. From the roof of the saloon in the garden, the battery presented one of the finest and most diversified spectacles which eyes could behold. The whole battery was almost filled, and presented an immense block of human creatures. The mixture of females dressed generally in light colors, and males with a more sombre costume, gave it a singular appearance. The harbor round the garden was also crowded with small boats full of persons, and the steamer James Kent, stationed a short distance from the western extremity of the garden, was literally crowded and hung round with spectators. The wharves and the shipping in the neighborhood were in the same state. There could not be fewer than thirty or forty thousand persons out on this occasion.

After clearing himself from the buildings of Castle Garden, the aeronaut finding that the quantity of gas was rather deficient, began to lighten the car by throwing out such things as he could spare. He flung out both his flags and his chapeau de bras, which were picked up by some boats as soon as they reached the water. The balloon then ascended and floated away in a north-east direction, which carried it directly over the city. About the middle of the city, he tossed away his grappling iron which fell in a gentleman's garden, and he was prepared, should occasion require it, to part with his coat also. This however, he endeavored to reserve to the last, as it contained his barometer. He was fortunate enough, however, to carry it through the whole voyage. He passed very near the spire of Trinity church, but when he reached St. Paul's his elevation was considerably increased. His ascent was so gradual that he was distinctly seen by almost every one in the city. He continued ascending until he crossed the East River, and about two miles beyond Newton, Long Island, he descended with great gentleness in a field. He was in the atmosphere for the space of an hour, so that it was nearly dark when he touched terra firma again. We have understood he stopped his progress merely by taking hold of a fence. The gentleness in the movements of the balloon may be attributed to the moderation of the breeze which died away with the declining sun. Having at this place found a countryman with a waggon, he hired him to carry him to town together with the balloon and car. The car was accordingly placed in the waggon, and the half emptied balloon floated in the atmosphere above. In this plight they passed through the village of Newton, to the small amusement of its inhabitants. Every one was out, old and young, gazing, with the little daylight that was remaining, at the strangest waggon load which had ever passed through their village. The wagoner continued his journey without intermission, and about half an hour after eleven o'clock, the aeronaut and his balloon were safely landed in Castle Garden.

Strayed or Stolen,

FROM the subscriber, on the 9th instant, a BLACK HORSE, about 15 hands high, glass-eyed; his hind and one forefoot white; had on a saddle and bridle nearly new. A liberal reward will be given for the Horse, and if stolen, twenty-five dollars for the apprehension of the thief.

Waggon Yard.

I HAVE erected on the Halifax road, a large and commodious House, for the purpose of accommodating the Waggoners. It is 150 feet long and 36 feet wide; under which waggon and teams can drive and stay all night for the moderate sum of 25 cents, and for a horse and cart 1 1/2 per night; and if there should be any persons wishing to go into the waggon yard, they are at liberty to do so, for the yard is as public as the Halifax streets, and not a cent shall be exacted from them. I have forage of all descriptions, such as corn, fodder, oats, &c. and it will be furnished on as reasonable terms as can be afforded in this place. No responsibility for accidents.

I also keep a Tavern, and will spare no pains to give entire satisfaction to those who may favor him with their custom.
