The instability of human greatness is strongly impressed upon every thing appertaining to man. The history of the world from the earliest ages, is a mere chronicle of the rise and fall of states and empires. Cities, once the pride of monarchs, the beauty of the Chaldean excellency, have been totally subverted from their foundations, and empires, which formerly embraced the greatest part of the civilized world, are now scarcely distinguishable on the map of the globe. Man himself, from the cradle to the grave, has ever been the victim of disease, and the child of misfortune. His body, warm with health and vigor, within the circle of a few revolving years, is covered with "the cold clods of the valley," his possessions transferred to strangers, and his name almost blotted out from the book of remembrance.

The pages of history teem with the melancholy details of the weakness and instability of man. States and empires, from the remotest periods of antiquity, have arisen, reigned and fallen. Time is indeed a deluge, which will eventually overturn the proudest monuments of human greatness in undistinguishable ruin.

Rome once embraced almost all the known world, from the east to the west, and from the north to the south. The Briton, the Gaul and the German; the Mauritanian, the Persian, and the Egyptian; the enlightened nations of Europe and the sable sons of Africa, bowed in subjection at her feet. Wherever she unfurled her banners, victory perched upon her standards. Her generals marched to conquest and renown, in the field of fame, while the soothing strains of eloquence flowed from the lips of her orators. Her palaces and temples corresponded with the greatness of her empire, and in short every thing gave evidence of firmness, strength and stability. But Rome, alas! has been subjected to fire and sword—the virulence of persecution—and the "pestilence that walketh in darkness."

Her cities have been wrapped in flames—her fields drenched with the gore of her subjects—her statues, temples and triumphal arches, demolished by the hand of violence, until the proud mistress of the world, has dwindled down into an insignificant province.

The land of Canaan too, "a land flowing with milk and honey," once swarmed with life and animation. There ethereal spirits descended on messages of grace to ruined man; there the praises of a Redeemer were sung on harps of gold—and there the temple of the Almighty shined the skies with its lofty portals. But the revolutions of a few centuries has witnessed the perfect demolition of her cities, and the dispersion of her inhabitants over the face of the earth. The sacred temple has been wantonly devoted to destruction, and the "Holy of Holies polluted with violence and infidelity; while a few scattered hamlets, tenanted by the stupid worshippers of the crescent, remain a lasting memorial of the instability of human greatness.

Nineveh, Babylon, and Palmyra, are splendid trophies of the instability of man. The massy walls, the spacious avenues and stately columns, proclaimed to the world the wealth, munificence and power of their inhabitants. The fine arts too, were in the highest state of cultivation—and music and poetry united their soothing strains to refresh the toil worn soul of man. In the halls devoted to joy and festivity, youth and beauty glistened, amid the splendor of the artificial day. But these magnificent cities, once gems amid the deserts around them, have long since become heaps of rubbish. In the streets once alive with the "hum of business," a sullen silence reigns, while a deathlike torpor pervades the palaces once boisterous with noise and mirth. The lofty pillars of marble have fallen by the lapse of ages, and the stately domes and palaces mingled in one common mass of ruins. The tranquil zephyr no longer wafts the delightful melody of music along the shady groves. Briars and thorns have sprung up in the spacious streets, and the sacred courts and vestibules, once trodden by intelligent and immortal beings, have become the domain of reptiles and beasts of prey. In the language of Ossian, "the fox peeps out of the wall, and the wild grass waves over his head."

Individuals, too, of exalted talents and distinguished reputation, have uniformly fallen victims to the mortality of human nature, and mingled with the common mass. A man may command a conquering army, or wield the destiny of a mighty empire one day, and the next, some floating castle or barred rock holds him incarcerated within its wooden or watery walls. To-day his brow is pressed with the wreath of victory—to-morrow the "iron enters his soul." One day, eloquence flows from his tongue—the next, the seal of eternal silence is placed upon his lips.—Where are now the men of science, who, for a time, shed so much light upon the world?—They have darted like meteors across the mental horizon, and left nothing but a trail of light behind them! Where are now the heroes of former ages; an Alexander, carrying fire and sword into the remotest corners of the earth; a Caesar, trampling upon the rights and liberties of his country; or a Marlborough, leading the proud array of a mighty nation to victory and glory? Bonaparte, too, who kept a hundred million of people in direful commotion for twenty years, and whitened all the plains of Europe with the bones of human victims, now sleeps the "iron slumber" on the desert shore of an insignificant island, as powerless and insensible, as the clay which surrounds him.

The experience of every individual proclaims the unstable nature of human greatness. A visit to the delightful village, which ushered us into existence, after an absence of a few years, introduces us to new scenes, and to an unknown race of inhabitants. Thorns & brambles have overgrown the romantic scenery, which witnessed the gambols of our youth; the beautiful rivulet, on whose banks we reclined, has refused its tribute to the ocean; different avocations dispersed our acquaintance; or the death-knelling bell announced the interment of our last and dearest friend.

These solemn truths must convince every rational mind, that human greatness is an airy phantom. How frail and fickle is man! Yea, he is but a shadow, and life a dream.

Alexander Campbell,

INFORMS the citizens of Raleigh and the public generally, that he has commenced the Tailoring business in this city, and will faithfully execute all orders in his line. Desirable Family Residence, for sale.

THE melancholy event which has occurred in my family, induces me to offer for sale my beautiful and elegant Villa, formerly W. R. Johnson's, within ten minutes walk of the centre of Warrenton.

The tract of land contains sixty-two acres of which forty are in woods and heavily timbered with oak and hickory, sufficient to furnish fire wood for a large family forever with care and management.

The soil is free, fertile and productive—the water excellent and abundant—the situation high, airy, pleasant and healthy. The improvements are an admirably built and finished, and most commodious Dwelling House, containing 3 rooms below & 2 above stairs, a dry and comfortable Cellar and several convenient closets; a new framed Quarter 36 feet by 18 with four large rooms and a chimney in the centre; a Kitchen, a Carriage House and Stables, an Ice House, a Well of excellent water at the door, a handsome Yard and Garden well paled in, together with convenient lots under good fences. And besides other Fruit Trees, 450 Peach and 200 healthy Apple Trees, of the most delicious sort; in short, every thing that can be desired by a family.

Nothing but the severe bereavement with which I have been visited, could have tempted me to part with this desirable and valuable property.

I am anxious to sell, and will grant a liberal credit for the whole or any part of the purchase money. Possession can be had at any time. Application can be made to Gen. Robert R. Johnson, who is fully authorized to sell; or to WILLIAM EATON. 90co4t
