WASHINGTON, April 17. 1871. The bill for the suppression of disorders n the South, which has passed both Houses of Congress, and now awaits the action of a committee of conference, seems to offer a practical solution of our Southern trouble, so far as congressional legis lation can accomplish an end so desirable. The principal and only opposition which deserved a candid refutation, was eng ndered by the clause which places in the hands of the President certain extraordinary powers-such as authorizing him to suspend the writ of habeas corpus when ever in his judgement he may deem it seems to give our "conscript fathers" great deal of trouble-especially the por tions which relates to the improvement of public grounds in this city. There is as you know, a proposition for a grand park in the southern portion of Washington City. To this, there are many practical objections, other than the large expenditure, which in these days of economy, can hardly be spared for such a purpose. The enchanting pictures of its prospective beauties are not enhanced by the reflection that it will afford a fine view of that filthy, pestiferous and much hated nuisance, the canal which passes through the proposed grounds, While dust and filth abound in our streets, and cattle and hogs are allowed free range while unsightly huts surrounds the Capitol :he least said about a grand public park are at a fever heat. The prospects of Gen. N. P. Chipman, Republican candidate for delegate to Congress, are exceedingly good-in fact, beyond question, safe. An attempt was made by some thirty women last week to register their names on the voting lists of their respective districts, which proposition was mildly rejected. The programme is said to be, another attemy at the polls, and if there denied the right of ballot to enter suit in the Supreme Court, under the plea that they are debarred from privileges to which they are entitled by the recent amendments of the constitution.

Extraordinary frimes demand extraordinary measures for their suppression. It is madness to parley with an assassin, or to fight on strictly courteous terms with legal weapon alone, when the murderous hand is at one's throat. The thing to be ascertained is whether the state of society at the South, and the inability of local governments to properly administer the laws, is such as to demand this kind of legislation. This point established, as it has been to the satisfaction of most reasonable men, the duty of Congress is plain.

We cannot oppose the class of men with whom this bill has to deal by moral influences. Educated in the school of violence, stern measures are the only argument they can comprehend.
