The New World, We have received two numbers of the above named daily paper, and placed the same on our exchange list. In politics it is straight-out Democratic, hoisting the names of Charles O'Conner for President, and John Q. Adams for Vice President. It is neatly printed on book paper, and has one illustration on the tatle page. The heading is gotten up in good style, with a spread cale in the foreground, the either talon clutching the "N2 in New and The 'W' in World; the National Capitol in the background; and on the right of it, C ris. pher Columbus, as he is seen on the National Bink notes, and on the left, is the "heathen Chinee, while below, on the right is a picture of Egypt, and on the left we have a picture of something else-probably, the Nile, or the East River, in the centre, under the engle, is the old Federal Court House in Philadel hia. Few things are more confounded than the

the antipodes of conscious terror. Every one of us has cause and motive to continue in existence so long as he has health and strength and work to do: but not one of us has an intrinsic reason for apprehension in going out of existence. Life bristles with purposes.

setivities, res onsibilities. We cannot seperate our elves from them if we would; they will fasten upon and absorb us in our own despite. Apart from instinct. life has its aims, its interests, and affections, that cannot be divorced without a desperate struggle and exceeding pain Is is the reflex of th's solicitude that makes in a mea-ure the shadows of death.

We are unwilling to surrender what life contains, though we may not have the lightest fear of what death may yield; and yet many of us are so little inclined to trace our own mental operations, that we do not draw the distinc ion clearly. The majority of men prefer their own country, and would not willingly leave it. It is to be concluded therefore, that they are afraid of another land? Is strong in-over and again. Death is an idea, an image, a mystery from which we shrink because it is a mystery forever impenetrable. The shrinking is inherent, but gives way to indifferent or faith as nearness and nature make their revelations. He who can deliver up the goods and charms of this world's being can turn to death
