

Kiwanians Have Varied Program

Talks by Senator-Elect Warren and LeRoy Martin Feature Meeting

Members of the North Wilkesboro Kiwanis Club were treated to a varied program Friday at noon, given under the direction of J. C. Reins, program chairman for the day.

Rev. and Mrs. Eugene Olive and small daughter, Emily, put on a brief program of entertainment in song and piano numbers, after which Mr. Reins conducted a schoolroom examination by giving Kiwanians a number of questions in government, history and geography, to answer. When response was tallied by Prof. T. E. Story as judge P. W. Eshelman held first place with C. T. Doughton and E. G. Finley tied for second. Mr. Reins presented the winner with a pound of coffee.

The program chairman then introduced Dalton Warren, of Sparta, senator-elect from the 29th district. Mr. Warren told of some of the things he will favor in the next legislature, among them being: no increase in taxation, better salaries for teachers, and eliminating unnecessary offices in order to balance the budget and raise the teachers salaries and if need be, reducing the appropriation for roads and raising the appropriation for schools. He asked for full cooperation of the public to legislators in order to work out beneficial and satisfactory legislation.

LeRoy Martin, of Raleigh, executive secretary of the North Carolina School Commission, was a guest of C. T. Doughton at the meeting, spoke briefly and complimented the attitude of Mr. Warren on the school situation. He said that the schools were suffering more than any other one department of the state government but declared that the school system as a whole has gained nation-wide attention and that many states were inquiring into the system of organization in this state.

Conduct Inquest in Death Wilkes Man

Millard Walker Smith Passed Away At State Road Home Monday Last Week

Coroner Stephen A. Rash was called to State Road on Monday of last week to investigate the death of Millard Walker Smith, age 45, who died at the home of John Kennedy there. After hearing the evidence the coroner's jury rendered a verdict of "death by acute alcoholism."

According to evidence presented, Smith, who had been making his home at State Road, visited the Kennedy home Sunday night. According to the Kennedys he spent the night, arising about three o'clock Monday morning. It was said he built a fire and sat down in a chair where he remained until about six o'clock when he suddenly pitched forward into the floor.

Members of the family were said to have picked him up and placed him upon a bed. They said he appeared to be sleeping, and that they left him and went to the barn to milk. It was upon returning from the barn that they found Smith to be dead.

The coroner's jury was empaneled when it was suggested the dead man might have been drinking poison whisky, and Dr. Hugh Parks, Elkin physician, was called in to make an examination. However, due to the fact that no autopsy was held, it was found impossible to determine if this was the case.

It was said Smith had been drinking prior to his death.

Funeral services for the deceased were held Tuesday afternoon from the State Road Baptist church in charge of Rev. Grant Cothren. The widow and seven children survive.
