

Mrs. Anne C. Reynolds-Smith Claims Entire $25,000,000 Estate For Daughter

Winston-Salem, Dec. 10.—Mrs. Anne Cannon Reynolds Smith, youthful textile heiress whose midnight marriage to Smith Reynolds ended in the Reno (Nev.) divorce courts, today laid claim to his entire $25,000,000 estate for her daughter, to the exclusion of Libby Holman, Broadway flane, who became his second wife, and her baby.

Contending she was Reynolds' lawful widow as her Nevada divorce was illegal, Mrs. Smith filed a petition in the litigation in Forsyth Superior court over the estate, objecting to a distribution of the fortune proposed by Reynolds' brother and sisters and asking the court to distribute it "according to law and precedence."

Wants All of Estate

Such a distribution, she contended, would deliver the entire sum to her daughter, Anne Cannon Reynolds, second disallowing the claims of Christopher Smith Reynolds, son of Miss

Holman, because his mother's marriage to Reynolds was void since it was entered into "while he was still the husband of Anne Cannon Reynolds."

While no one would be quoted, sources close to the Reynolds family said Mrs. Smith's action brought into the open phases of the questions involved in distribution of the dead tobacco heir's estate which they had hoped to avoid.

Where Was The Ham

"Say, waiter, there's no ham in this ham sandwich you gave," said a patron of a cheap lunch-room.

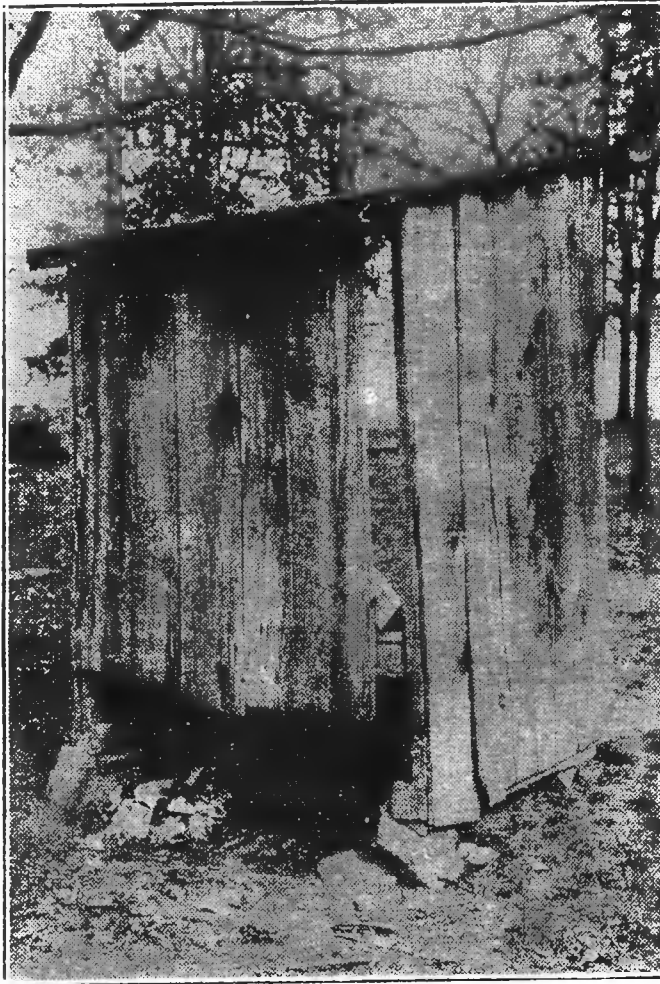

"Oh, that's all right," said the waiter, "you ain't come to the ham yet."

The man kept on eating for a few seconds, then called to the waiter:

"No ham yet."

"Oh," said the waiter, "you've bit over it now."

Find Hitching Ring In Middle of 30-Inch Oak Tree

When John Ford and his two sons had sawed to the center of a 30-inch dead oak tree in the Dellaplane section one day last week their saw suddenly ceased to cut and the points of the teeth were badly dilled.

Filing the saw twice did no good and they began sawing the log from the opposite side. When they neared the center the same thing happened. They naturally became curious and bursted the log. In the center they found a wedge which had evidently been driven into the heart of the tree when it was a sapling. On the outer end of the wedge was a hitching ring and the entire ring was at least 12 inches from the bark of the tree.

Older people remembered that a barn had once stood near the tree, and that the sapling was probably used for a hitching post. The age of the tree was estimated at between 75 and 100 years.

These figures are further borne out by the fact that a recent rural housing survey shows that only 13.6 per cent of the rural homes in North Carolina are properly sanitized while 53.4 per cent have unimproved sanitary facilities such as the open-back, surface privy or crude lean-to and 33 per cent have no toilet or sanitary facilities whatsoever. These percentages will apply very closely to the sanitation of Wilkes County except that the percentage of homes with no sanitary facilities whatever is quite a bit higher.

Fortunately, a sanitary privy is within the reach of every home in Wilkes County where such is needed, and at a minimum cost. Through an arrangement between the North Carolina State Board of Health, the Wilkes County Health Department, and the Federal Emergency Relief Administration, the local relief office will furnish the labor and supervision necessary to construct an approved privy free of any charge provided the interested party will furnish the materials necessary for proper construction. An estimate of the materials required and arrangements for securing the free labor may be had by communicating with the writer at the County Health Office in Wilkesboro.

It is hoped that the people of Wilkes County will recognize the value of this most vital health measure and will take full advantage of the opportunity to have a sanitary privy at the home while it may be had at so low a cost to the individual.

QUESTION AND ANSWER

Question: Is it advisable to feed wet mash at this time of the year?

Answer: Wet mash has a definite place in poultry feeding. It may be used at this time of the year to bring birds into production and will also retard the neck moult in early hatched pullets. Care, however, should be exercised in feeding. The mash should be fed at mid-day or in the early afternoon and only as much mash should be fed as the birds will clean up in fifteen minutes.

Sanitary Inspector Urges Building Of Fly-proof Privies For All Homes

By C. C. FOARD (Sanitary Inspector)

The cut shown at the top is the standard pit privy approved by the North Carolina State Board of Health. This privy is the result of many years experience in the construction and maintenance of tens of thousands of pit privies by the State Board of Health engineers and field men, and once constructed will afford the householder a safe and sanitary means of excreta disposal for some five or ten years, at the end of which time it may be transferred to a new pit and so on indefinitely. A comparison of the approved pit privy with the open-back, surface privy shown below and a careful reading of the following paragraphs will enable the layman to see the inestimable value of the fly-tight, sanitary privy to a home not provided with running water and sewers.

The transfer of filth diseases from person to person almost always involves the careless disposal of human excrement. Flies, other insects, and animals having access to fecal matter carry it from place to place. Flies transfer particles of it to the kitchen and the dining room table; chickens carry it to the soil about enclosed springs and well platforms, where spilt water washes the excreta into the well, or it is carried to the bottom of the well bucket; storm water carries it away into the children's playgrounds, or into the vegetable garden. Every case of typhoid fever, diarrhea, dysentery, and many other diseases means that the victim has eaten human fecal matter containing germs of these diseases. How simple it is to control these filth diseases by providing a means of disposal such as a pit privy where no other sanitary facilities are available.

The death each year in North Carolina of 1,875 people of diseases that could be easily prevented is a terrible license to pay that filth and insanitary conditions may prevail. As awful as is the loss of 1,875 lives each year, largely because human excreta is not properly disposed of, the deaths from filth diseases do not represent the full measure of suffering for which they are responsible. The deaths represent only a small fraction of the number of cases of sickness attributable to these diseases. It is generally accepted by health workers that only approximately 10 per cent of all typhoid cases are lost; that only about 5 per cent of all dysentery cases result in death; that diarrhea is fatal to only about 3 per cent over and 10 per cent under two years of age, respectively, of those persons stricken with the disease. Each year, therefore, in North Carolina alone the filth diseases are responsible for between 21,000 and 22,000 cases of sickness, exclusive of the illness caused by hookworm and other intestinal parasites.

makes every mile cost more

Good roads and better cars cut driving costs from around ten cents a mile to less than five.

But gas tax diversion is sending us back to high cost of car operation. Lack of maintenance has already done millions of dollars damage to our roads—and our roads grow worse daily.

Justice to car owners demands that gas taxes be used for roads only. Tell this to your legislators!
