

This Week In Washington

Washington, Jan. 2.—(Auto-caster)—Most of the talking done in Washington from now on, for a while, will be on Capitol Hill, rather than at the other end of Pennsylvania avenue, where the executive departments are housed. There are two reasons for this. One is that the members of the new congress have a lot they want to say, and the other is that since Louis Howe, the President's real right-hand man, has recovered his health sufficiently to take an active part in affairs, word has gone out to administration officials not to talk so much, without first finding out whether the White House approves what they want to say.

plenty of others, and some may be aired soon.

Carter Glass Speaks Up

Up on Capitol Hill some of the most vigorous language is coming from Senator Carter Glass, of Virginia. The senator is the foremost banking authority in congress. Away back in the Wilson administration he framed the Federal Reserve act and pushed it through. He is a good scrapper and is always on the watch for anything he dislikes in the banking policy of the administration.

Senator Glass is out with a denunciation of the order of the Federal Reserve and the Federal Deposit Insurance corporation limiting interest banks may pay to 2-1/2 per cent. He asked administration officials where they found any law for that, and they admitted there wasn't any that would apply to state banks not members of the Federal Reserve. The fiery little senator from Virginia also took a crack at the recommendation of the so-called Viner committee's recommendation that the law authorizing Federal Reserve to make direct loans to industry should be repealed. "Give it a chance," says Senator Glass, in substance.

The Viner report, named for Jacob Viner of the University of Chicago, covers a lot more territory than that, however, and is regarded here as furnishing full confirmation of the situation, first pointed out in these dispatches, whereby banks are hamstrung by confusing orders from different authorities and subject to examinations by several sets of examiners, each with a different point of view. That situation has been to some extent corrected, but the Viner committee went out into the field and talked direct to business men, and is convinced that an intermediate credit system for industry is essential, whether administered by the RFC or the Federal Reserve.

Davis Questions Laws The statement by John W. Davis, who was once the Democratic party's candidate for President, that much of the New Deal legislation is illegal and unconstitutional, is expected to put backbone into some of the conservative Democrats in congress. Some 200 cases in which the constitutionality of the New Deal is at issue are now before the courts.

The recent conference of business leaders, in which the National Association of Manufacturers and the Chamber of Commerce of the United States agreed on what they would like to see done in the way of amending the New Deal, may have results. At least, it answers the challenge of the administration spokesmen: "Well, what do you propose?" The business leaders agreed that direct cash relief was preferable to "work relief." In that they are in opposition to the administration. They want reform measures subordinated to recovery measures. They would like to see the nation go very slowly in experimenting with unemployment and old age insurance. But on the whole their attitude is far more "socially-minded" than the critics of business expected.

Those who think they know the President's mind report that he is not out to attack private power companies, but only the financial system of holding companies which has resulted, he believes, in too high prices for electric current.

On Federal Money

The latest estimate is that about 25,000,000 persons are getting federal money, in one way or another. Six and a half million are on salaries or other direct payments; 400,000 are directly employed on public works and about 2,000,000 indirectly getting public works funds. About 700,000 are on regular federal payrolls, while 750,000 single persons and 4,500,000 families are on federal relief. How to switch this load to states and municipalities and get industry to take up the payroll burden is still the most important question the government has to face.

The death of Mrs. Mary Harriman Rumsey, as a result of a fall from her horse, has literally saddened official Washington. This daughter of the late E. H. Harriman, the railroad king, was one of the most popular persons in official life, as chairman of the consumers division of the NRA. Her brother, W. Averell Harriman, is as hard a worker and almost as well-liked. He is practically second in command in the NRA and his judgment is more and more relied upon.
