Would Create Fund

Washington, Feb. 8.—The fact that the administration's social security plan eventually would create a huge fund of billions which could be used to help finance individuals, industries and the federal, state and national governments cropped up today in discussions on Capitol hill. The possibilities were outlined as the house ways and means committee ended hearings on the pending bill with the intention of pressing it for a house vote week after next.

WILL REACH JURY SOMETIME TUESDAY

self for this part, although reports still circulated today that Hauptmann himself wished C. L. Fisher, of Flemington, young associate defense counsel, and Frederick A. Pope, another of his counsel, to share in addressing the jury.

Hauck's statement will be comparatively brief. He will sketch tersely the evidence adduced by the state: That Hauptmann possessed nearly $15,000 of the Lindbergh ransom money when he was arrested last September, that eight of the foremost handwriting experts of the country attributed to his hand the writing in the ransom notes, that the kidnap ladder was not only linked to him through plane marks found on the rungs and uprights, but that the upright No. 16, was part of the attic flooring in his Bronx home.

He will point out that Col. Charles A. Lindbergh identified Hauptmann's voice as that of the man who collected the $50,000 ransom in St. Raymond's cemetery, the Bronx, on the night of April 2, 1932; that Dr. John F. Condon, Lindbergh's agent, identified Hauptmann as the "John" he talked to in Woodlawn cemetery before the ransom payment and at the ransom payment.

The defense summation will combat these points.

The state charges that Hauptmann himself conceived the crime, wrote the ransom notes, climbed the ladder to the nursery, stole the baby, left the first ransom note and abandoned the ladder 70 feet from the house because it was too heavy. It charges he killed the baby before he left the estate, ripped off its sleeping garments and in doing so, tore off the thumbguard, found a month later by Betty Gow, the baby's nurse.

Reilly will contend all the evidence, purporting to connect Hauptmann with the actual crime of burglary, as the indictment charges, with the abduction of the child, its death and the ransom collection is not only circumstantial (the state, of course, concedes that) but that it is of the flimsiest nature and does not warrant a conviction.

The big Brooklyn lawyer will fight over the old ground, step by step. He will charge the state police with inefficiency and will remark the fact that no fingerprints, found in the house or on the ladder, were Hauptmann's.

He will charge the misspelled words in Hauptmann's requested writings, words which correspond to the misspellings in the ransom notes, were dictated by the police after Hauptmann had been held prisoner for many hours; that the writing of the notes was Hauptmann's handwriting, imitated by another.

He will tell the jury that Louis Kiss, the Hungarian silk painter, saw Hauptmann in a Bronx bakery the night of the kidnaping; that Elevert Carlstrom, young Swedish carpenter, saw him there; that August Van Hanke, Harlem restaurant keeper, saw Hauptmann on the street with a police dog that night, and that April 2, the ransom payment night, Hauptmann was having a first-Saturday-night-of-the-month singing party in his home with Hans Kloppenburg and was nowhere near St. Raymond's cemetery.

He will review once more Hauptmann's own story of his whereabouts and his explanations for the possession of the money, his dealings with Fish and his stock market transactions. He will repeat that Hauptmann was celebrating his birthday at home on the night of November 26, 1932, when Mrs. Barr said she saw Hauptmann in front of her ticket cage, and that Fish left the shoebox the night of December 2, 1933, when his friends held a farewell party for him in Hauptmann's home before he sailed for Leipzig, Germany, where he died last March 29.

His most difficult job, perhaps, will be to convince the jury that Arthur J. Koehler, federal wood technologist, was in error when he assigned to Hauptmann's tools the construction of the ladder, and when he testified that the ladder upright, No. 16, was part of the attic flooring in Hauptmann's home.

Attorney General David T. Wilentz will sum up for the state Tuesday, Supreme Court Justice Thomas W. Trenchard will charge the jury and the case will be ready for deliberation it is expected, late Tuesday afternoon.

Butterfat Price Reaches 36 Cents Pound Market Conditions Are Good be materially lessened if the farmers breed calves from their present herds, taking especial note of the fact, however, that only good calves from good stock should be kept for milkers, it was pointed out.

The government has appropriated $6,000,000 to indemnify owners of stock which has contagious abortion and $50 for each registered cow or $20 for each grade cow is being paid when the diseased cows are slaughtered. Mr. Scott pointed out that dairy herds in the dairy centers of the country are being materially lessened by this practice and that this factor has had much to do with the increase in price of dairy products, together with generally improved business conditions.

In urging that farmers pay more attention to their herds and breeding of cows he stated that there is every indication that the price of dairy products will stay up and that there will be no more distressing drops as occurred about three years ago. This prediction was also based on the condition of the butter and cheese markets at this time.

One year ago the ten principal markets in the country had 47,000,000 pounds of butter on hand. At the same time this year the same markets had a mere 6,000,000 pounds on hand.

In the face of an increasing demand 5,000,000 pounds less butter was produced in 1935 up to this week as compared to the amount for the same period last year.

Anti-Sales Taxers Will Submit Plan

Opponents of Levy to Have Figures Ready For Presentation On Tuesday

Raleigh, Feb. 10.—Up against the controversial sales tax provisions of the revenue bill part of which it has already adopted, the joint finance committee of the assembly yesterday afternoon quit work until Tuesday, by which time the anti-sales tax forces promise to have their figures and suggestions ready.

Representative McDonald, of Forsyth, suggested to the committee yesterday that although he is still opposed to any form of sales tax as un-democratic, he will offer figures next week tending to show that those who favor a sales tax may lower the rate and spread it out over wider territory.

Negro Gets 10-Year Term For Slaying His Wife

Oxford, Feb. 7.—Wm. Graves, 50, negro, today in superior court was convicted of killing his wife and sentenced by Judge W. C. Harris to serve 10 years in state's prison.

agent of Wilkes county, pointed out that good dairy cows are selling much higher than in the past few years and that many farms are getting $100 per cow and in some cases even more. Mr. Scott stated that the present rising trend in price of cattle will continue indefinitely, according to present indications, and the price of dairy cows may soon be double what it now is.

Consumption of dairy products has increased at least 40 per cent during the past year and, notwithstanding the increased milk flow expected throughout the summer, good prices can be anticipated by dairy farmers for many months to come, according to the predictions from the most reliable dairy statisticians.
