Williams for the murder of his brother-in-law, John Abernethy, 25. The jury found him guilty of second degree murder. Hester shot Abernethy to death at the home of Abernethy's parents several weeks ago. He pleaded self defense but the two eyewitnesses, his wife and one other person, failed to sustain that plea.

Welfare Officer Wants Books Back

Asks School Teachers To Return Loaned Books Soon As Possible

"School teachers and patrons who borrowed books from my office should return them as soon as the school term closes or before that time if they are not being used," Charles McNeill, county welfare officer, stated today.

Through private donations the welfare office has secured a considerable supply of books that are very useful to the teachers who loan them to needy school children. During the present school term all of these books were loaned out by Mr. McNeill.

In most of the schools the term is nearing its close and it is important that all the books be returned in order that the welfare officer may have them for use next year.

DISCLOSURES MADE IN PRISON PROBE

Charlotte, March 13.—A legislative investigating committee tonight had before it evidence that North Carolina prison camp officials had made a practice of secret burials for friendless victims of their disciplinary practices.

Withholding the identity of their informant, a former convict who is still under suspended sentence, members of the committee tonight were unanimous in their determination to visit the scenes of lonely graves described by him.

The committee was told that when beatings, chained suspensions and other forms of punishment proved fatal, bodies of the victims were carted to lonely mountain spots and buried and the true circumstances of the cases glossed over in official reports.

The informant was quoted as claiming to have been himself a member of such burial parties, and he offered to lead the committee in its quest.

The committee received the startling testimony near what it had expected would be the end of an investigation into practices in Mecklenburg county which were alleged to have resulted in the death of two prisoners and the loss of both feet by two others.

Testimony regarding other hitherto unmentioned brutalities at the Henry Little convict camp near here was produced earlier in the day as the committee began its study.

Starting primarily as an investigation of why it was necessary to amputate the feet of two negro convicts after they had been chained in solitary confinement at the camp, the legislators already had heard evidence discrediting official reports on the death of a negro inmate and attributing it to his having been suspended in chains for a long period.

RABIES VACCINATION MEASURE IS DEBATED

Raleigh, March 13.—Dog legislation providing for the vaccination against rabies of all dogs in the state once a year; the kind of lawmaking that Senator John Sprunt Hill prophesied if it did nothing else would ruin many a promising political career now budding in the legislature was left hanging in the air after an hour's argument in the senate today. Action was postponed by agreement of proponents and opponents when it appeared that amendments exempting nearly a score of counties were being offered and would destroy the effect intended in the bill. It was indicated by Senator Gravelly, who sponsored this measure, introduced by Representatives Fenner and Abernethy in the house, that an effort will be made to revamp the measure to meet the objections of those who are trying to exempt their counties and that he will seriously contend for passage at a later date, probably this week.

REVENUE MEASURE RECEIVED IN HOUSE AS MEMBERS CHEER

Raleigh, March 13.—Democrats purged their primaries of Republican participants today in the house, so the purgers proclaimed, and in the session that was a political epic the bulky revenue bill was reported by Chairman Cherry, of the finance committee.

The house action on the primary measure followed protracted debate in which Minority Leader Charles A. Jonas asked the majority not to affront electors who might wish to change their minds.

But the house did not stop at expurgation. It tacked an oath on to the amendment and fixed it so that Republicans must stay put once they change. Several Republican members of the house voted with the Democrats—evidently to make certain that the body of death will be tied to the majority.

There was no partisan heat in the debate. Mr. Jonas had great provocation but forewent it. He told the Democrats that they should have no trouble in getting the Republican votes whether these were cast in accordance with the primary pledges or not. "Up in my country they can get all the absentees they need," Mr. Jonas said smilingly. Tam Howie, who was enjoying this torture of the Republicans, laughed widely at the Jonas crack.
