SAYS SCREW WORM IS FATAL TO LIVESTOCK

Farmers along the southern border of North Carolina are being warned to look out for screw worm infestations of their livestock when the weather gets warmer.

Screw fly maggots, a source of much trouble in States farther south, appeared in a number of southern North Carolina counties last summer, said L. I. Case, animal husbandman at State College.

The maggots are hatched from eggs laid in wounds or scratches in the skin of farm animals by the screw fly. If the wounds are not treated, and the maggots killed, the animals often die in a short time.

Unlike blow fly maggots, which feed on dead tissue, screw fly maggots burrow into the living tissue. Wounds infested with screw worms give off a bloody discharge. Blow fly maggots do not cause bleeding.

In infested localities, farmers should not ear-mark, castrate, or dehorn cattle in warm weather except when absolutely necessary.

Examine the animals frequently for scratches or other wounds, which should be treated with pine tar oil. Remove from barns, lots, and pastures all nails, wire, broken boards, or other objects that may cause flesh or skin wounds.

Any animal found infested with screw worms should be treated immediately. Instructions for the treatment may be obtained by writing L. I. Case, animal husbandry department, N. C. State College.

4-H Clubs To Protect Small Game And Birds

North Carolina 4-H club boys and girls will soon be rallying to the aid of small game, birds, and wild plants—which have been fast disappearing from the countryside.

Boys and girls living in the country are in a good position to help conserve and propagate wild life, said L. R. Harrill, 4-H club leader at State College.

The 4-H clubs have launched a state-wide wild life and conservation program which will be pushed as one of their major projects this year, Harrill continued.

As an added inducement, arrangements have been made for a state wild life and conservation camp to which will be sent ten club members from each of the four extension districts of the State for a week's training with all expenses paid.

The trip to camp will come as an award for club members submitting the best reports on their activities between now and August 1. It is open to any club boy or girl from 10 to 20 years old.

The club members will make surveys of birds and animals, study trees, plant wild shrubs and flowers, build bird houses and fish ponds, collect and mount specimens of trees and shrubs, and feed birds and small game in winter.

A feature of the program will be making a map of the farm showing the location of fields, cultivated crops, forests, pastures, meadows, eroded areas, fences, buildings, springs, streams, and the size, kind, and location of feed for birds and game.

Harrill pointed out that these maps will also be useful to club members' parents in the new soil improvement program.

"How much tobacco will North Carolina farmers plant and harvest this season with normal weather conditions and no control program," is the question many county planning committees are debating now.

Farm Broadcasts Will Feature Spring Gardens

Home demonstration workers at State College report that rural women of North Carolina are finding much helpful information in the Carolina Farm Features radio broadcasts.

Of special interest to them, the specialists say, are the home demonstration broadcasts, which are heard each Thursday over a number of stations. In preparing discussions, the specialists select timely subjects which are holding the attention of the rural women at the time the talks are to be presented.

Also the women are deriving much information from those specialists of the botany and horticulture departments who are now discussing rock gardens, spring and summer vegetable gardens, and flowering and ornamental plants. These broadcasts are heard each Tuesday, with the two departments alternating.

The schedule for the week of April 6-11 follows: Monday, W. L. Clevenger, "The Place of Ice Cream in the Diet"; Tuesday, E. B. Morrow, "It's Planting Time Again"; Wednesday, Glenn R. Smith, "Buying Cotton in the Local Markets"; Thursday, Miss Mamie Whisnant, "Good Housekeeping"; Friday, T. T. Browne, from the State Department of Agriculture, "An Egg Marketing Program for North Carolina"; and Saturday, Forestry Department.
