

For GOVERNOR

"The Lieutenant-Governor's strongest talking point is familiarity with state affairs."—Concord Tribune.

"But the principal strength of Graham . . . is not that he belongs to the younger political generation, not that he has dared to take a definite stand with regard to the liquor question and refused to pussy-foot on it, not that he is a great juggler of words whose oratory casts a spell over all who hear it, but because he knows more about the government of North Carolina than any of the other prospective candidates, his friends maintain."—Wilmington News.

" . . . a man who has been in the public limelight for a number of years, who is well versed in state affairs and the inner phases of the state government; a man with a pleasing personality and with many, many friends . . ."—Salisbury Post.

"Few, if any, men in North Carolina, have so great a familiarity with education, highways, taxation, and other problems which a Governor has to face."—Chapel Hill Weekly.

" . . . the people know that he knows what it is all about when it comes to the governmental problems and duties in North Carolina . . ."—Jackson County Journal.
