Saturday Night Marks Official End Of Winter

Washington, March 13.—The remarkable winter of 1936-1937 will come to an end at 7:45 p. m., eastern standard time, on Saturday, March 20. At that moment the earth will have reached the point in its orbit where its axis is at right angles to a line from the sun. This, the sun will then be directly over a point on the equator. This is the vernal equinox, which marks the beginning of spring, and, in older times, marked the beginning of the year.

When the sun is over the equator, it rises exactly east, and sets exactly west. It is above the horizon half the day, and below for half, neglecting the effect of the earth's atmosphere, which bends the rays of sunlight around the earth's curvature, so that we always see the sun higher than it really is. But the supposed equality of day and night gives us the name "equinox," which really means "equal night."

After March 20, the north pole of the earth swings over towards the sun, and the south pole away. For us in the northern hemisphere, the sun will climb higher in the sky. In southern countries, on the other hand, it sinks lower, so this is for them the beginning of autumn.
