1923. His business judgment is unexcelled and he has always proven a valuable member of the board. He has the excellent record of never having missed a director's meeting. Mr. Rector is a member of the Masonic Fraternity, having received the Blue Lodge degree and is a member of Lodge No. 407 A. F. & A. M., is also a member of the Royal Arch Chapter of North Wilkesboro; is a member of Zebud Council No. 16, Royal & Select Masters of Winston-Salem, and he is a steward in the Methodist church of North Wilkesboro.

North Wilkesboro prizes Mr. Rector as one of its most outstanding citizens and one who can always be found serving his fellow man when it is possible for him to do so. The institutions to which he belongs, recognize and appreciate his advice as being sound and logical. He is a man that is loyal to his friends and one who always stands for the finer things of life.

The early potato acreage in North Carolina this season was estimated at 34,000 acres compared with an estimated acreage of 43,000 acres harvested in 1937 and a ten-year acreage of 33,100 acres, reports the N. C. Department of Agriculture.

Cashion Writes On Hospitality

(Editor's Note: This is the 6th in a series of articles by local officials and civic leaders which we are publishing in cooperation with the Governor's Hospitality Committee of Wilkes county, emphasizing the need for hospitality to visitors.)

The annual invasion of North Carolina by thousands of tourists and vacationists from north, east, south, and west has started.

Service station men are in the front rank of North Carolina's Hospitality Committee. Their opportunities to extend courtesy and hospitality to our visitors will be numerous. A service station is usually the first contact visiting motorists make upon arrival. In many instances the need for information and conveniences offered are the factors that make them drive in. Automobile supplies and services may be of secondary importance to them for the moment. There are motorists, also, who like to stop for a friendly word or two and relax a few minutes after a long drive. No matter why they stop, we have the opportunity to greet them cordially and in a friendly manner help them with their varied and often complex problems.

While there are many sources of free information today, numbers of motorists leave their homes for distant points without definite information about routes, road conditions, points of historic interest and scenic beauty, accommodations available and probable cost.

To these visitors, service station employees will be able to render a real service by familiarizing themselves with best routes and distances to our scenic spots. We should take advantage of every opportunity to get first-hand information about our main points of interest, so as to be able to discuss them with our visitors in an interesting and enthusiastic manner. Our own travels and experiences will add a bit of zest and color to these discussions. Service station men are supposed to know the answers to all the questions our visitors ask. How well we do the job of helping these visitors to North Carolina spend their time and money pleasantly will determine in most cases, whether they return and bring their family and friends. Rich and poor alike respond to courteous and friendly attention.

We need make no mistake about the tangible and intangible value of such service to our business and to the development of North Carolina.

While the oil industry has played an important part in the building of our unexcelled system of highways and has made possible greater performance of cars on these roads, yet almost the only way that this great industry contacts its largest group of customers, the motoring public, is through the service station men.

Because of this responsibility, it is well for us to pause and seriously review our performance as service men.—A. A. Cashion.
