"HOMETOWN FOLKS"

Down memory's lane: Carrying water for the circus elephants... That first job of running errands for the editor of the hometown paper... "That first 'store shave' and the nerve of asking for a 'close shave'... Taking a bath in the old corn-crib... Playing pirates on the old 'crick'... Watching that horsetail hair in the water trough to see if it turned over night to a worm... Bragging on your kind of frogs for producing the biggest warts... That new milliner in "Boysville" and the boys going for her like a fire in a lumber-yard and that same year, Mehtabel Gookens wanted to go by her own name after the marriage, and the poor husband said: "Okay, just so I don't have to carry your name"... That first trip from home to college 35 years ago; while unpacking, finding a dollar bill placed in the little Bible at mother's favorite passage, decorated with her tear-drops; as if she had planned it, hearing the campus organ chimes, pealing, "O Come All Ye Faithful" on that first Sunday morning away from home.

Heavens, with barbed wire fences: "Millet could never have painted his immortals: 'The Angelus', 'The Gleaners' or 'The Man With the Hoe'. If his early life had not been spent on the farm; there he absorbed the strength, simplicity and beauty of nature, which characterized all of his best paintings. You can take a boy from the farm to the big city—but you can never take the farm out of that boy."—Mrs. Fred Collins, Covington, Ky.

Neighbors: The biggest hearted American, Will Rogers, loved by all, went to the top, daily preaching his favorite prayer: "I never met a man I did not like." I have had happy times at living and working in some large cities, since I struck out from "Boysville," around the turn of the century, with nothing in this wide world, but a smile, good health and love for this native land. I always loved life so well that I'm sure I'd be happy even floating down the Amazon on a raft and quite busy a-dodging even alligators and head-hunters; when I die, I hope some sweet voice will sing: "In the Gloaming" and read David's twenty-third Psalm and I want some good neighbor to write for me this epitaph: "Gone—Lived 140 years." But no one can live that long happily and worthwhile, without good neighbors and real friends; often, I think, if I could plan my life all over again, I'd shape my work, so that I could live and work in some nice little friendly city, with a name somewhat like "Springdale" or "Pleasantville," with a lot of genuine neighbors and friends—and, maybe, try to buy an interest in the local paper, the most important and constructive business of all toward the building of any community. For, many a time, cooped up in a large city, without handy relatives, friends and neighbors, I have felt like a lowly ant, or much like singing out over the roof-tops that little verse, so often played by the famous Jack Teagarden's blues band, from "Makin' Friends:"

"I'd rather drink muddy water, Lord, sleep in a hollow log, Than be up here in New York, Treated like a dirty dog."

Shavings, around the old pot-bellied stove at the Corner Store: "My hometown, 90 miles away, is pretty quiet now—since our last shotgun wedding."—Amos Smith, Little Rock, Ark. "Our 2400 mile border, without guns, Yorks, West, soldiers, Europe, please say."—Gussie Anderson, Duluth, Minn. "In time of war, we depend on our soldiers; in time of peace, let's not forget them."—John A. Sutherland, London, Ontario. "Today's simile: As necessary to any community as a good newspaper."—Rev. C. S. Benton, Daytona Beach, Fla. "My hometown paper in Missouri carries an ad: 'To trade a filling station, radio, hens, gun and parrot for a good used car and trailer.' Look out, California, for more 'Oaksies,' 'Arkies' or 'Miseries' are coming."—Henry A. Collins, Pueblo, Colo. "I have been getting the 'Argus' from my home town in Illinois, since I left the good old town, 27 years ago."—Charles A. Clayton, Omaha, Neb. "Our town is growing, but we still need about 57 good, plous funerals."—Sam A. Hale, Coulee, Wash. "I can't figure out why Europe is trying to give that section back to the apes."—Tom Watkins, Meridian, Miss. "The 'Hermitage,' in the Cumberland Valley, where a strong man lived and died."—W. E. Hoyt, Chattanooga, Tenn. "A nearby coroner, serving his sixth term, wants just one more term—so he can officiate over a few more of his enemies."—L. K. Peek, Mobile, Ala. "Locally, Albert Swirczynski and William Kwiatkowski—just sneeze good and hard twice and you, got both correctly."—Jack B. Rice, Gretna, La. "Our boys and girls could get jobs here at home, saving the necessity to leave the old hometown, if we would spend our money at home, building dinner-pal businesses. Throw your mail order catalogs in the ash can."—Cecil Gibson, Mitchell, So. Dak.

Wilkes Woman Passes Sunday

Mrs. Richard Gwyn Phillips Falls Victim To Heart Ailment

Mrs. Mary Jane Dickerson Phillips, 55, passed away at her home at Benham Sunday morning from a severe heart ailment from which she had been suffering for a year. Her condition was aggravated by the illness and death of her husband, Richard Gwyn Phillips, who died almost three weeks ago, and her death was not unexpected.

Mrs. Phillips was a daughter of the late Esquire and Martha Wall Dickerson, of Wilkes county, and a highly esteemed woman. She was a charter member of the Shoaly Branch Baptist church.

Her immediate survivors include one daughter, Mrs. L. C. Carter, of Benham; 11 grandchildren and sixteen great-grandchildren.

Funeral services were held Monday morning at 11 o'clock from the Shoaly Branch church. The rites were in charge of Rev. L. B. Murray and Rev. Richard Day. Interment was in the church cemetery.—Elkin Tribune, Nov. 14.
