Army Directory Service Helps To Deliver Army Mail

Fort Bragg.-Erch day the personnel of the Army's Directory Service here goes quietly mad because each day some one insists on writing to Bud Smith, Fort Bragg, N. C.

The Directory Service in charge of tracing incorrectly addressed letters is now flooded with a thousand pieces of undecipherable mail. All day long 25 girls from the NYA sit and file, index and cross-index, search and re-address Tweetsie' Fading cross-index, search and re-address the constant stream of inade quately addressed mail.

For some inexplicable reason civilians don't care to be bothered with writing the name of the outfit to which their soldier boy belongs. Mail addressed to Private Smith, Fort Bragg, N. C., requires a ten-day research before it can be forwarded.

Another popular error occurs in mail addressed to Fort Bragg. South Carolina. Please, the Directory Service, pleads, please tell everyone that Fort Bragg is in North Carolina. And to the usual crackpots who are writing to "Blondie, care Fort Bragg," and to "All the Sergeants and Corporals in the Ninth Division," and to "John Kelvin, Selective Service Draftee Who Was Drafted Here Last Week So Won't You Please Deliver This Immediately;" Corporal Johnny Gold of the Directory Service begs, "Give us a break and lay off for a while, will you?"

"Screwy addresses." Corporal Gold calls them -- and among the screwiest was one addressed to a khaki kid "Somewhere in U.S. Army-Probably Fort Bragg. Other contributions for the Corporal's "Headache Shop" are "Feet Bragg, Fort Brig, Camp Bragg." And when somebdoy writes to John Doe, "Care of the "Selective Service Draftee."
