The demand for farm products in 1942 is expected to be greater than in 1941, although the improvement will not be as marked as it was this year over 1940, says the U. S. Agriculture Department.

Sergeant Delves Into Cosmic Rays

Camden, S. C.—A veteran army mess sergeant and dietetics instructor who delves into cosmic rays and atom guns—that's Technical Sergeant M. B. Zager of Camp Edwards, Mass., who plays a major role in the preparation of meals for high-ranking officers at First Army Headquarters, in Hoffman, N. C., during the current First Army maneuvers.

"My collaborator and I," said Sergeant Zager in an interview, "have known each other for years. We've been working for a long time on the problem of harnessing cosmic rays and using their vast power. I've only been able to do it in my spare time, you understand."

Whereupon Sergeant Zager displayed pages of formulae on the scrubbed boards of the mess table and launched into bio-chemistry and physics. Together with his collaborator, pharmacist John C. Brown, of New Bedford, Mass., the Sergeant claims to have created living protoplasm out of inert matter and to have kept it alive indefinitely. Another of their accomplishments, he said, was the manufacture of chlorophyll—the green fluid of plants—in a pure, isolated state. Sixty-seven days were necessary to prepare the protoplasm in its living form; much less time for the chlorophyll.

"Just as one example of what we have been able to do with our discoveries," the Sergeant went on, "is the way we treat food substances. We have been able, for instance, to keep bread fresh and wholesome for two weeks."

Reserved for the last was an 8x10 photostat of a machine which used harnessed cosmic rays as "ammunition." These rays can be canalized, said the Sergeant, and used with great effectiveness under proper control.

In response to a further question in a more personal vein, the Sergeant said that he had been in the army for 24 years and that this was his eighth enlistment. He has been in the dietetics field for the past 17 years, and teaches the subject to classes of army students at the Cooks and Bakers School at his home station. For the past two years he has been called to special duty at the mess of First Army staff officers during maneuvers last year at Ogdensburg, N. Y., and now in the Carolinas.

His favorite preparation is jelly-rolls.

Research in paint and pigment technology has resulted in the development of improved house paints which clean themselves under the action of wind, rain, and sun.
