Bread Plays Vital Role In Human Diet

Bread is the universal food. It enters into the diet of more people than does any other single food item, with the possible exception of rice, says Dr. Walter J. Peterson, in charge of animal nutrition for the N. C. Agricultural Experiment Station at State College. For millions of people, bread is the chief constituent of the diet, owing perhaps to its cheapness and high caloric value.

"That is why," says Dr. Peterson, "the recent enrichment of white flour with Vitamin B-1 and calcium is so important to the health of the American people in wartime. Also the British Food Control Commission has ruled that all white bread used in England must be enriched."

Dr. Peterson explained that Vitamin B-1 is composed of a substance known as "thiamin." He said: "Thiamin is concerned with the breakdown of foods that furnish energy for the body processes. Furthermore since it has been shown that the daily requirement of this vitamin depends upon the amount of energy expended, it is imperative that the inclusion of thiamin in adequate amounts in the diet of our people be assured."

"Food processors in the United States have long sought to please our palates without much consideration for our vitamin needs," the State College nutritionist asserted. "We have acquired a taste for many vitamin-deficient foods."

"Since it is unlikely that we will ever be able to successfully educate the public taste to a point where unprocessed foods would be really enjoyed, it is time that more serious consideration be given to the thought of fortifying our processed foods. This can be accomplished, in most cases, by slight changes in manufacturing methods, such as the enrichment of bread."

Questions Answered By State College

QUESTION: When should lespedeza be harvested for hay?
ANSWER: Lespedeza should be cut when in early bloom, or when 12 inches high, whichever occurs first, says E. C. Blair, Extension agronomist of State College. To leave it longer results in loss of the lower leaves and a poorer grade of hay.
