Navy's Seabees Asking For Men

Lieut. Charles J. Dietrich, a representative of the Navy's Seabees, naval construction battalions, will set up a temporary station in Winston-Salem April 23 and 24 it was announced by Chief Specialist J. T. Stephenson, Chief Petty Officer in charge of the Winston-Salem Recruiting Station.

The Seabees were recently opened to men of draft age, and for an indefinite period, men between the ages of 18 and 38 may enlist in the Navy with petty officer ratings.

The procedure for enlistment in the Seabees is practically the same as before the curtailment of voluntary enlistments. Applicants qualified in almost any phase of construction should visit the recruiter, bringing three letters of recommendation. The letters should describe the experience and ability of the applicant, rather than his moral character.

If found eligible in all respects, the applicant will be guaranteed a petty officer rating in the Naval Reserve, and will be given a letter which should be presented to his draft board. This will clear him for his Navy assignment, and his enlistment will be immediate, under regular Selective Service procedures.
