Basement Rooms Is Answer About Crowded Homes

With the family car in storage, have the youngsters now taken over your living room to do a little rug cutting? Of even when you listen to your favorite news commentator, does it disturb sister Jane who is trying the catch a few winks in the next room before reporting for the swing shift at a war plant?

The solution to such war discomforts is to take that unused basement and turn it into an extra living room. According to D. Hill Carlton of the Carlton Hardware company, you can do the whole job with a paint brush. Coating the walls and ceilings with Kem-Tone, and enameling odd pieces of furniture in bright colors will transform the drearest basement into a gay and cheerful playroom.

"Let yourself go when beautifying a basement," the paint man advises. Color schemes can be as gay as you like, so throw conservatism to the winds and have fun. Decorators advise, however, that walls and ceilings be done in light tones to provide maximum light reflection. Trims and furnishings will add the brilliant accents.

Colored posters make excellent wall decorations and can be used to set the theme for the entire room. With circus posters, for example: paint the ceiling in red and white stripes to resemble the "big top". Or use travel posters with soft sunny yellow walls. If someone in the family has an artistic flair, let her try her hand at a mural.

And with the new points now available the remodeling will be fun for the entire family. Kem-Tone, a water-thinned, washable finish, can be rolled onto the walls and ceilings without even using a brush. Floor enamel will give even concrete floors that expressive look, however, don't try to paint damp floors! And quick-drying enamels for the furniture are still available in a wide range of brilliant colors.

Make your dollars fight.
