Officers Search Blue Ridge Mountains For Killer Who Shot From Thicket

Sheriff C. G. Poindexter and deputies are combing the Blue Ridge mountains in Wilkes and Mother Of 14 Is Ashe counties for Roy Osborne, who is alledged to have shot and killed his brother. Tom Osborne, Sunday.

Tom Osborne died at the Wilkes hospital Sunday, six p m., from a bullet wound inflicted at 11:15 Sunday near his home a few hundred yards from the Blue Ridge Parkway at Sheets Gap.

A bullet, thought to have been fired from a 30-30 calibre rifle, entered Osborne's left side and went through his body.

Sheriff Poindexter, Deputies S. U. Reynolds, P. E. Dancy and a number of citizens deputized for the search, learned that the Osborne brothers had had some difficulties and the officers received sufficient information to convince them that Roy Osborne murdered his brother. They were informed that Roy Osborne was seen to leave his home, carrying his high powered rifle, and walking in the direction of the spot where Tom Osborne was shot while walking along the road toward his own home a short distance away.

The officers found the spot in a laurel thicket from which the fatal shot had apparently been fired, and they found tracks which led up the mountain and across the Blue Ridge Parkway toward Ashe county. There they lost the trail but have continued the search over a wide erea.

Tom Osborne was 52 years of age and is survived by his wife and nine children. His brother, charged with the murder, is also a middle aged man and has a family.
