Goat Signed To Baseball Contract

Maynard Hurler May Be Mound Ace For Blue Ridge Team Here

Clayton Goad, 23-year-old pitcher with a good record and excellent prospects of better years ahead, has been signed as a pitcher for North Wilkesboro's first professional baseball team.

Henry Loman, manager of the North Wilkesboro entry into the Blue Ridge League, was more than delighted to have corralled Goad, whose services were being sought by at least four clubs. Goad stands six feet, two, and in 1944 and 1945 pitched for Roanoke, Va., in the Piedmont League. In 1944, he won 13 and lost 5 and in 1945, he won 15 and lost 9, when he was picked on the Piedmont all-star team.

In 1946, Goad started the season for Winston-Salem Cards and finished the year at Greensboro, where he won the pennant clinching games. His record in the Carolina League that year was 7 won and two lost. Last year he played semi-pro ball. Before he pitched for Roanoke in 1944, he was in service and received a medical discharge.

With players signed and rookie prospects better than expected, the task of gathering a ball club for North Wilkesboro is going at a rapid pace. Loman is expecting a large crop of rookies for try-outs in spring training to begin April 5 at North Wilkesboro.

Five players in addition to Goad were signed several days ago. The latest acquisition with promise is Ed Morton, age 21.
