

Trend in Polio Still Upward

Recent years have brought an upward trend in incidence of the mysterious and crippling infantile paralysis disease. Mr. Sam Ogilvie, chairman of the Wilkes county March of Dimes campaign declared today. He added that 1948 marked the sixth consecutive year of unusually high polio incidence and urged greater support than ever before for the March of Dimes drive to replenish funds of the local chapter and the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis.

The March of Dimes chairman disclosed that reports of the United States Public Health Service over the past 15 years show the totally unpredictable waves of infantile paralysis across the nation. Further, these charts, which have been published by the National Foundation as part of its education service, indicate that an epidemic in a given area a year or two ago does not immunize that area during next summer's polio danger period.

"A war does not end with the signing of an armistice," Mr. Ogilvie said. "Neither is an epidemic of infantile paralysis over when the last new case of the prevalent disease has been recorded. There remains the grim reality of the aftermath. The greatest cost is yet to come—the cost of aftercare and rehabilitation of the stricken."

Mr. Ogilvie cited various instances throughout the country where local chapters had paid out record amounts for patient care last year despite low local polio incidence. Even without epidemics, many such chapters found it necessary to apply for additional aid from the emergency fund of the national headquarters, to care for those stricken in previous years.

"In all, more than 400 local chapters in 42 states received aid from the emergency fund of national headquarters," Mr. Ogilvie declared. "Treatment of last year's stricken requires record funds in 1949. That's why we here in Wilkes must give 50 per cent more to the 1949 March of Dimes."

32 Breeding Co-Ops Formed In Past Year

Thirty-two cooperative associations for artificial breeding of dairy cattle were formed in North Carolina during 1948, bringing the total number of associations in the State to 35, according to John F. Brown, dairy specialist for the State College Extension Service.

Prior to 1947, there was only one association in the State, operating in Forsyth county. Yadkin and Davie Counties formed associations which began operation in the fall of 1947.

Mr. Brown said the 35 associations now in operation cover more than 40 counties and have a membership in excess of 5,000 farmers. North Carolina, he added, now ranks right up among the large dairy states in the total number of associations in operation.

The last two counties to organize under the program were Wake and Wayne, which formed associations late in the year. Chatham and Wilson are among the counties now considering the artificial breeding program.
