Soil Conservation In Wilkes

By Dunn and Chipman

Millard Brown, whose farm is located near Hays, is using terraces and contour strip farming to control erosion and keep up yields.

Despite the rainy weather, Roby Rhodes, of the Hay Meadow community, has saved a good crop of alfalfa this spring. Mr. Rhodes seeded the alfalfa last fall and is expecting several more crops during the summer.

Wade Walker, has constructed approximately one mile of terraces on his farm located west of Cycle. Mr. Walker used a farm tractor and disc plows to construct the terraces.

Van Wiles built approximately 1-2 mile of terraces on his father's Sid Wiles' farm located near Fishing Creek Church. Van used a farm tractor with farm plows to do the job.

On Friday, May 27, the Soil Conservation Service delivered young bass for the fish ponds of Mr. Perry Lowe, of the Brushy Mountain community, D. A. Holleman of Somers community, Dwight Barker, who lives on the Little Mountain Road near Austin, and two ponds in the Clingman community, one belonging to D. J. Redding and one to Harry Greene and Carl Mathis. These ponds were stocked with broom last fall and should afford some good fishing next year.

About three years ago, the Wilkes County work unit of the Tri-Creek Soil Conservation District helped Mr. Ambrose Johnson of Hays, N. C. to underplant a boundary of hardwood with white pine seedlings. The young pines are now growing beautifully and will be ready to take over when the hardwood is taken off.

The personnel of the Tri-Creek Soil Conservation District recently assisted Ronzie Harrold of the Hay Meadow community, to stake terrace lines on a pasture field. Mr. Harrold has limed part of this pasture and plans to use lime and phosphate and some balanced fertilizer this fall to maintain a good pasture on this land.
