School Buildings And Bond Election

A majority of the people who voted in the special election August 13 voted against the proposed issue of $600,000 in bonds for school buildings in Wilkes county.

Evidently, the will of the people as expressed in the election preferred a different type of financing for school needs. None should be led to believe that Wilkes county can fill school building needs with the $551,000 to be received from the state, in view of the fact that the county is years behind in school building construction and in view of the fact that the population has been growing most rapidly in the past ten years.

A recent compilation by the county board of education and County Superintendent C. B. Eller showed that at present prices it will take more than one million dollars to fill the needs for classrooms, heat, sewage, plumbing and lighting of schools. It is evident that the bare needs cannot be had for the approximately $700,000 available, counting state aid funds and funds appropriated by the county.

In addition to classrooms, there are many schools sorely in need of auditoriums. Students learn much in auditoriums, although some teachers discount the value of students taking part in extra curricula activities, possibly because it calls for more work on the part of the teachers. Schools also need auditoriums for community gatherings and these should be provided.

Since the majority of the people voting have voted down the bond issue method of school building financing, it stands to reason that another way must be used.

This year Wilkes county has about $126,000 in the budget for school buildings, this amount being provided by a levy of 55 cents of the $1.38 total tax rate, and by refunding some present bonds. Since the people have voted out school bond financing, they must of necessity be prepared for school building construction on a "pay as you go" basis, which could be aided somewhat by refunding of some of the county's bonds as they fall due.

The needs are great, the money now available will not go around to all the building projects so desperately needed and the people should realize that money must be raised in taxes for school buildings, which in the long run is more economical and will provide greater value per tax dollar than bond financing.

When Gasoline Was A Nuisance

Fifty years or so ago the oil industry had problems. One of them was a nuisance called gasoline, which was a by-product of kerosene production. It wasn't good for much of anything and the oil companies had a tough time getting rid of it.

Even kerosene, which was the mainstay of the business, presented difficulties. Certain types of kerosene had a heavy and unpleasant sulfur smell. Customers took to calling it "skunk oil." Finally, the industry came up with a new refining method, and the smell was eliminated.

As time went by, and it became apparent that the horseless carriage was here to stay, gasoline was no longer a drug on the market. Some visionaries even felt that it would eventually outsell kerosene. However, a production problem remained. It was difficult to produce enough gas of high quality at a low price. So the oil people did some more research, and discovered a process to take care of that.

Today, a typical large oil company makes 2,000 different products, many of which have nothing to do with driving and lubricating machinery. There are 250,000 service stations throughout the country, all competing for the motorist's business. And there are thousands of producers and refiners in competition with each other.

That's the way one industry has grown, in less than a lifetime. This is the type of enterprise that has given safer service to customers and built American industry.

In the city of Boston, 85 per cent of the children supported by public care had to be committed to that division because of the drinking of their parents.—Anna Macay, Deputy Commissioner, Child Welfare Division.

Detroit Free Press: "Husband in Court; How Welfare-Supported Drinker's Family Told." Drink was more important to this "man" than the well-being of his wife and five children.

While campaigning for funds for its own building program, the First Baptist Church of Washington, D. C. (the church President Truman attends) is also raising $20,000 to rebuild bombed churches in Europe and Japan.

Date of the 1950 meeting of the Southern Baptist Convention in Chicago has been changed from May 10-14 to May 9-12, so ministers can return to their own churches for Mother's Day, Sunday, May 14.

THE EVERYDAY COUNSELOR

By Rev. Herbert Spaug, D. D.

"Are you all in a hurry inside?" That describes the condition of many of us. A correspondent writes that he saw this question printed in bold red letters on the menu in a well-known Southern hotel. An octogenarian of keen mind, he writes that back in the 1880's the same thought was expressed in these words, "Impatience dries the blood faster than age or sorrow." He adds this comment of his own, "It probably did then and does now."

Call it what you will either impatience of "inside hurry" it throws our whole program of living out of balance. We hear much about tension today, and I am meeting it on every hand: in letters from troubled readers, and from those who come to our office for diagnosis and treatment.

Dr. Henry Link in his book, "The Rediscovery of Man" which appears in digest form in the August issue of "Your Life" says, "At the bottom of most fears both mild and severe will be found an overactive mind due to an underactive body: too much energy churning the higher brain centers in vicious circles, not enough energy driving the arms and legs and hands in useful work or play."

He then relates the case of a young man who came to him suffering from insomnia and the fear of not being able to go to sleep. He went to bed later and later but couldn't sleep. "He gave a long and technical description of how this fear had come about. The real causes could have been stated in one sentence: too much thinking, reading, and talking, and not enough work and play with other people."

He wanted some prescription for relaxation. The doctor said, "Join a club or gymnasium and get into some regular competitive games. You do not need relaxation; you need exertion. You put too much of your physical energy into thinking and imagining things. If you will run around the block you will have used some of these energies through your lower brain centers, that part which drives the body and the legs. If you run hard enough and often enough you will automatically relax. You have thought yourself into this fear with your mind; you can run yourself out of it with your legs." The young man took the prescription and it worked.

Dr. Link has put his finger on a lot of our "inside hurry" troubles. If we transfer some of that energy into outside physical activity according to age and station, then tension will come down. Then try reading a Psalm each day followed by reading from the New Testament starting with St. John. Follow it up with prayer. Prayer and physical work is what most of us need. Try it for yourself.
