YEAST POWDERS

WEDNESDAY MORNING, JAN. 8, 1862.

MASON-SLIDELL AFFAIR. The following is a coppy of the letter of Gen. Scott that appeared in Europe, to which fregent allusion has been made: To _____, Esq.:

My Dear Sir: You were right in doubting the declaration imputed to me, to wit that the Cabinet at Washington had given orders to seize Messra, The over-prompt recognition, as belligerents, sers had been dispatched. I think I can satisfy you in a few words that you have no serious occasion to feel concerned profess, she has no disposition to encourage the dissensions in America.

In the first place, it is almost superfluous to say to you that every instinct of prudence as well as of good neighborhood prompts our government to regard no honorable sacrifice too great for the friendship of Great Britain. This must be obvious to all the world. At no period of our hi tory has her friendship been of more importan to our people-at no period has our government been in a condition to make greater concession to preserve it. The two nations are united interest and sympathies-commercial, social, p itical, and religious-almost as the two arms one body, and no one is so ignorant as not know that what harms one must harm the other a corresponding degree.

I am persuaded that the British Government can entertain no doubt upon this subject; but if does, I feel that I might take it upon myself say that the President of the United States, wh made aware of its existence, will lose no opp tunity of dispelling it. Nor is there anything, I venture to affirm, the seizure of these rebels emissaries which our to receive an unfriendly construction from En land. Her statesmen will not question the le contraband of war; that right has never surrendered by England, it was even guarante to her by the treaty of Paris, and British gu frowning down nearly every strait and inland upon the globe, are conclusive evidence that a regards this right as one, the efficacy of which m be not yet entirely extinguished. Of course the is much that is irritating and vexatious in t exercise of this right under the most favorable of cumstances, and it is to be hoped the day is far distant when the maritime States of the wo will agree in placing neutral commerce beyond the reach of such vexations. The United States Government has been striving to this end for more than fifty years; to this end, early in the present century, and in its infancy as a nation, it embarked in a war with the greatest naval power in the world; and it is even now a persistent suitor at every maritime court in Europe for a mere liberal recognition of the rights of neutrals than any of the other great maritime nations have yet been disposed to make. But till those rights are secured by proper international guarantees, upon a comprehensive and enduring basis, of course England cannot complain of an act for which, in all its material bearings, her own naval history affords such numerous proceedents. Whether the captives from the Trent were contraband of war or not, is a question which the two Governments can have no serious difficulty in agreeing upon. If Mr. Seward cannot satisfy Earl Russell that they were, I have no doubt Earl Russell will be able to satisfy Mr. Seward that they were not. If they were, as all authorities concur in admitting, agents of the rebellion, it will be difficult to satisfy impartial minds that they were any less contraband than a file of rebel soldiers or a battery of hostile cannon. But even should there be a difference of opinion upon this point, it is very clear that our Government had sufficient grounds for presuming itself in the right to escape the suspicion of having wantonly violated the relations of amity which the two countries profess a desire to preserve and

The pretence that we ought to have taken the Trent into port, and had her condemned by a prize court, in order to justify our seizure of four of her passengers, furnishes a very narrow basis on which to fix a serious controversy between two great nations. Stated in other words, an offence would have been less if it had been greater. The wrong done to the British flag would have been mitigated, if, instead of seizing four rebels, we had seized the ship, detained all her passengers for weeks, and confiscated her cargo. I am not surprised that Capt. Wilkes took a different view of his duty, and of what was due to the friendly relations which subsisted between the two governments. The renowned common sense of the English people, I believe, will approve of his effort to make the dischare of a very unpleasant duty as little vexatious as possible to all innocent

If, under these circumstances, England should deem it her duty, in the interest of civilization, to insist upon the restoration of the men taken from under the protection of her flag, it will be from a conviction, without doubt, that the law of nations in regard to the rights of neutrals, which she has taken a leading part in establishing, requires revision, and with a suitable disposition on her part to establish these rights upon a just, humane and philosophic basis. Indeed, I am happy to see an intimation in one of the leading metropolitan journals which goes far to justify this inference. Referring to the decision of the English Admiralty Courts, now quoted in defence of the seizure of the American rebels on board the Trent, the London Times, of the 28th of November, 'So far as the authorities go, the testimony of international law writers is all one way; that a belligerent war cruiser has the right to stop and visit and search any merchant ship upon the high seas. * * But it must be remembered that these decisions were given under circumstances very different from those which now occur.—Stemmers in those days did not exist, and mail vessels, carrying letters wherein all the nations of the world have immediate interest, were unknown. We were fighting for existence, and we did in those days what we should neither do, nor allow others to do, nor expect ourselves to be allowed to do, in these days."

If England, as we are here encouraged to hope, is disposed to do her part in stripping war of half its horrors by accepting the policy long and pervisit and search any merchant ship upon the high

we did in those days what we should neither do, nor allow others to do, nor expect ourselves to be allowed to do, in these days."

If England, as we are here encouraged to hope, is disposed to do her part in stripping war of half its horrors by accepting the policy long and persistently urged upon her by our Government, and commended by every principle of justice and humanity, she will find no ground, in the visit of the Trent, for controversy with our Government. I amisure the President and people of the United States would be but too happy to let these men go free, unnatural and unpardonable as their offences have been, if by it they could emancipate the commerce of the world. Greatly as it would be to our disadvantage at the present crisis to surrender any of those maritime privileges of belligarents which are sanctioned by the laws of nations, I teel that I take no responsibility in saying that the United States will be faithful to her traditional policy upon this subject and to the spirit of her political institutions.

On the other hand, should England be unprepared to make

GENERAL SCOTTS LETTER ON THE pared to make a corresponding sacrifice; should she feel that she could not yet afford to surren-der the advantages which the present maritime code gives to a dominant naval power, of course she will not put herself in a false position by asking us to do it. In either case, therefore, I do not see how the friendly relations of the two goveraments are in any immediate danger of being

Mason and Slidell even under a neutral flag; for I was not even aware that the government had had that point under consideration. At the time of my leaving New York it was not known will not attempt to deny, nor that act, with some that the San Jacinto had returned to the Ameri-can seas; and it was generally supposed those curred, has planted in the breasts of many the persons had escaped to Cuba for the purpose of suspicion that their kindred in England wish reembarking in the Nashville, in pursuit of them evil rather than good, but the statesmen to which vessel the James Adger and other cruiple are confided act upon higher responsibilities and with better lights, and you may rest assured that an event so mutually disastrous as a war beabout our relations with England if, as her rulers tween England and America cannot occur without some other and graver provocation than has yet been given by either nation.
