The course of the British Government in relation to the Tuscarora, as given in our column of foreign news this morning, is another item that will be remembered here in our relations with that

That she has the right to make laws and regulations for her own ports, restricting their use, no one is prepared to dispute. But that she has acted with any showing of wisdom in contriving at almost every turn to embarrass us in a great crisis none can believe. Short of actual war she could hardly have taken a course better calcula-ted to cause irritation, anger, unfriendliness in the future; and if it is not made at the proper time to tell seriously in our intercourse with her, then we are greatly mistaken in the character of

By some fatality for her, she has been the cause of more injury to us than all the ether European Powers taken together. Her ships have supplied the rebel States with arms, her press and people have contrived to keep the rebel hopes alive. Nay, the action of the government itself, in its fierce preparations for war with us when the circumstances did not justify such hasty action, was all that was calculated to do us injury but for a degree of elevated statesmanship on the part of our government, which, for the time, warded off By some fatality for her, she has been the cause our government, which, for the time, warded off view of all this, quietly commend itself to preparations, which, in the end, will teach England that needed lesson she has never fairly learned yet, of tempering her arrogance toward other Powers. Bending all laws to her caprices, and defying every interpretation but the one the chooses to make, she will be met finally by a will determined as her own; and if—as suggested by the discreet fears of the Times—her own shores escape some of those visitations she has always had in store for other countries, it will be because embracing a variety of styles of patterns of Brooches,

A MONARCHY FOR MEXICO. The following telegraphic dispatches we find in the Cark Advertiser of February 5th : The Morning Post (supposed organ of Palmerston) says that it has now been determined, with the assent of Great Britain, by the Courts of Paris and Madrid, that their armies shall march direct from Vera Cruz to the capital of Mexico, and there suppress the existing executive. Engthe presence of a powerful squadron in the Gulf of Mexico, and to garrisoning the fort of San Juan d'Ullos with a force of seven hundred marines during the continuance of the healthy season on that coast. This force, when the season grows unhealthy, is to be replaced by acclimated Cuban troops. The Post says: We believe that it is a probable result of this march of the allies on Mexico that the unhappy and distracted republic will re-appear to the world as a constitutional monarchy, and that the Archduke Maximilian, brother of Francis Joseph, Emperor of Austria, will assume the title of King of Mexico. It will not be impossible if funds necessary to maintain an army of occupation in support of the new government are provided, until it will have derived sufficient stability to stand alone. The Mexicans have tried a republic, and it has sunk away under a succession of atrocious military tyrannies. They are believed to be convinced that a monarchy will give them order, and that a constitutional monarchy will insure the only freedom they can possibly maintain. The Morning Herald's Paris correspondent says that, in addition to the troops already sent off, four more batteries of artillery have received orders to hold themselves in readiness to start at an hour's notice. The Patriesays the allied troops are to advance on the city of Mexico early in March. There will be no nominal commander-in-chief. The military commanders and the admirals will act according to the decisions of a council of war, as
