WEDNESDAY MORNING, MARCH 26, '62.

Down Hill--A Life Picture.

Not long since I had occasion to visit one of our courts, and, while conversing with a legal fr end, I heard the same of John Anderson call-

'There is a hard case," remarked my friend. I looked upon the man in the prisoner's dock. He was standing up, and plead guilty to the crime of theft. He was a tall man, but bent and infirm, and fifthy; his face was all bloated and bloodshot; his hair matted with dirt, and his bowed form quivered with delirium. Certainly, I never saw a more pitiable object. Surely, that man was w rd. "Will" ---

I had half spoken his name, when ie quickly raised his head, and cast upon me a look of such imploring agony that my tongue was tied at once. Then he covered his face again. I asked my legal companion if the prisoner had counsel. He said no. I then told him to do all in his power for the poor fellow's toenefit, and I would pay him. He promised, and I left. I could not remain and see that man tried. Tears came to my eyes as I gazed upon him, and it was not until I gained the street and walked some distance that I could breathe freely.

John Anderson! Alas! he was ashamed to be known as his mother's son. That was not his real name; but you shall know him by no other. I will call him by the name that stands upon the records of the wurt.

John Anderson was my schoolmate, and it was not many years ago-not over twenty-that we left our academy together; he to return to the home of wealthy parents, I to sit down for a few years in the dingy sanctum of a newspaper office, and then wander off across the ocean. I was gone some four years, and when I returned I found John a married man. His father was dead, and had left his only son a princely for-

"And, C.," he said to me, as he met me at a rallway station, "you shall see what a bird I have caged. My Ellen is a lark, a robin, a very princess of all birds that ever looked beautiful or sang weetly."

He was enthusiastic, but not mistaken; for I found his wife all he had said, simply omitting the poetry. She was one of the most beautiful women I ever saw. And so good, too; loving and kind. Ay, she so loved John that she really loved all his friends. What a lucky fellow to find such a wife, and what a lucky woman to find such a husband; for John Anderson was as handsome as she, tall, straight, manly, highbrowed, with rich chestnut curls, and a face as faultlessly noble and beautiful as artist ever copied. And he was good, too, and kind, generous, and true.

I spent a week with them, and I was happy all the while. John's mother hived with them, a fine old lady as ever breathed, and making therself constant joy by doting on her "darling boy," as she always called him. I gave her an account of my adventures by sea and land in foreign cilmes, and she kissed me because I loved her dar-

I did not see John again for four years. In the evening I reached his house. He was not in, but his wife and mother were there to receive me, and two curly headed boys were at play about Ellen's chair. I knew at once they were my friend's children. Everything seemed pleasant until the little ones were abed and asleep, and then I could see that Ellen was troubled. She tried to hide it, but a face so used to the sunshine of smiles could not conceal a cloud. At length John came. His face was flushed and his eyes looked inflamed. He grasped my hand with a happy laugh, called me "old fellow," "old dog," said I must come and live with him. and many other extravagant things. His wife tried to hide her tears, while his mother shook her head and said : "He will sow these wild oats soon. My darling never can be a bad man."

"God grant it!" I thought to myself; and I knew that the same prayer was upon Ellen's

It was late when we retired, and we might not have done so even then, had not John fallen asleep

On the following morning I walked out with my friend. I told him I was sorry to see him as I saw him the night before. "Oh," said he with a laugh, "oh, that was nothing, only a little wine party. We had a glorious time. I wish you had been there."

At first I thought I would say no more, but was t not my duty? I knew his nature better than he knew it himself. His appetites and pleasure bounded his own vision: I knew how kind and generous he was-alas ! too kind too generous. "John, could you have seen Ellen's face last evening, you would have trembled. Can you make her unhappy?"

He stopped me with-"Don't be a fool ; why should she be unhappy?" "Because she fears you are going down hill," but we promised to correspond often.

Three years more passeds during which. John Anderson wrote to me at least once a month, and of ener sometimes; but at the end of that time his letters ceased coming, and I received no mor for two years, when I again found myself in his native town. It was early in the afternoon when I arrived, and I took dinner at the hotel. I had finished my meal, and was lounging in front of the hotel, when I saw a funeral procession winding into a distant churchyard. I asked the landlord whose funeral it was. " Mrs. Anderson's," he said; and as he spoke I noticed a slight drooping of the head, as if it cut him to say so.

"What! John Anderson's wife ?" I ventured. " No," he said, " it is his mother;" and as he told me this, he turned away. But a gentleman near by, who had overheard our conversation, at once took up the theme.

" Our host don't seem inclined to converse up on that subject," he remarked, with a sbrug, in-quiring, "Did you know John Anderson?"

"He was my schoolmate in boyhood, and my bosom friend in youth," I told him. He then led me to one side, and spoke as ful

"Poor John! He was the pride of the town six years ago. This man opened his hotel at that time, and sought custom by giving wine suppers. John was present at many of them, the gayest of the gay, and the most generous of the party. In fact, he paid for nearly all of them. Then he began to go down hill, and has been going down ever since. At times, true friends have prevailed on him to stop, but his stops were of short duration. A short season of sunshine would glean upon his home, and then the night came, more dark and dreary then before. "He said he never would get drunk again; but still be would take a glass of wine with a friend ! That glass of wine was but the gate that let in not born a villain. I moved my place to obtain a the flood. Six years ago he was worth sixty fairer view of his face. He saw my movement, and he turned his head. He gazed upon me a single instant, and then, covering his face with his hands, sank powerless into his seat. 'Good God!" I involuntarily ejaculated, starting formany times. And she ever bore blows from him! But now she is at rest. Her 'darling' wore her life away, and brought her gray hairs in sorrow to the grave. Oh, I hope this may reform him."

" But his wife?" I asked. "Her beavenly love has held her up thus far, but she is only a shadow of the wife she was six years ago," he returned.

My informant was deeply affected, and so was ; consequently I asked no more. During the remainder of the afternoon I debated with myself whether to call upon John at all. But finally I resolved to go, though I wait d till after tea [ I found John and his wife alone. -They had both been weeping, though I could seemt a glance that Ellen's face was beaming with hope and love. But, oh! she was changed, sadly, painfully so. They were glad to see me, and my hand was shaken warmly. "Dear C., do not say a word of the past, John arged, shaking my hand a second time. I know you spoke the truth five years ago. I was going down hill. But I have gone as far as I canhere I stop at the foot. Everything is gone but my wife. I have sworn-and my oath shall be kept-Ellen and I are going to be happy now."

The poor fellow burst into tears; Ellen followed suit, and I kept them company. I could not help crying like a child. My God! what a sight!-The once noble, true man, so fallen-become a mere broken glass-the last fragment brightly reflecting the image it once bore, a poor suppliant at the foot of hope, begging a grain of warmth for the hearts of himself and wife! And how I had honored and loved that man, and how I loved him still! - Oh, how I hoped-ay, more than hoped-I believed, that he would be saved. And, as I gazed upon that wife-so trusting, so loving, so true, and so hopeful, even in the midst of living death, I prayed more fervently than I ever prayed before, that God would hold him up-lead him back to the top of the hill. On the morning I saw the children-grown to be intelligent boys; and though they looked pale and wan, yet they smiled, and seemed happy when their father kissed them. When I left there John took me by the hand, and the last words he said were, "Trust me; believe me now; I will be . a man henceforth, while life lasts."

I read in a newspaper the death of Eilen Anders son. I started for the town where they had lived, as soon as possible, thinking I might help some one. A fearful presentment possessed my mind. "Where is John Anderson," I asked.

A little over two more years had passed, when

"Don't know, I'm sure. He's been gone these three months. His wife died in the mad-house ast week." " And the children?" "Ob, they both died before she did."

I staggered back and hurried from the place .hardly knew which way I went, but instinct ed me to the churchyard. I found four graves which had been made in three years. The mother, wife, and two children slept in them.
"And what has done this?" I asked myself.—

And a voice answered from the lowly sleeping places-"The demon of the win- able !" But this was not all the work. No. no. The next day I saw-oh! God!-what was far more terrible! I saw it in the city court room. But that was not the last; not the last. I saw my legal friend on the day following the trial: He said John Anderson was in prison .-I hastened to see him. The turnkey conducted me to his dell : he key turned in the large lock ; the ponderous door with a sharp creak swung upon its hinges, and I saw a dead body suspended by the neck from a grating window! I could see nothing of John Anderson there, but the face I had seen in the court-room was sufficient to connect the wo; and I knew that this was all that remained of him whom I loved so well. And this was the last of the demon's work; and the last act in the terrible drama. Ah! from the first sparkle of the red wine it had been down. down, down I until the foot of the hill had been finally reached!

When I turned away from the cell, and once more walked amid the flashing saloons and revel halls, I wished that my voice had had power to thunder the life story of which I had been a witness, into the ears of all living men!
