I wish it distinctly understood that these Goods were bought in times of peace, and consequent-

From England, since the death of the Prince Consort, are heard rumors which may be taken as possible shadows of coming events. The Queen is subject to fits of depression, which at times renders it impossible to approach her. It is well known that the Prince of Wales gives little promise of filling up the void created by the death of his father. His tastes are of a low order, and whenever left to his own devices, he is fond of herding with parties utterly unworthy of him. He is morbidly susceptible of flattery of a gross kind, and his amours are all, more or less, of a vulgar character. Shortly before the death of the Prince Consort, it is well known that he visited Cambridge, but it is not generally known that the conversations with the Prince of Wales at Maddenly were of so unsatisfactory a nature as to give him the most serious anxiety. On his return to Windsor he brooded over what had passed to that degree that his physician remontraevery destription, will find me prepared this SPRING ted; and only a short time before his death he said to furnish them with BETTER GOODS, at more to the Princess Alice that the answers he received from her brother were of a character so low, so depraved and vitiated, that he feared all the pains he had bestowed on his education, would be found to be worse than useless.

It appears there is some woman in town who exercises great influence over him, and once or twice the Prince stole away from Maddenly unknown to General Bruce, his tutor, to see her. Upon one occasion he was found out, but not until the train had departed, when a telegram was despatched to Windsor, and the Prince was semewhat surprised to find at the station, waiting for him, Having a splendid Stock of the most fashionable one of the royal carriages, with Sir George and approved French CLOTH, DOESKINS, Gray in attendance, to escort him to the pater familias.

The Princess Royal, too, who married the Crown Prince of Prussia, has, it appears, been united to a man of dissolute character. Sometime ago her Royal Highness was said to have 7,120 to compete with any one in the old North State in sprained her ankle, when the truth was that her 17.374 making any Garment or Clothing to order, in the most husband, in one of his drunken fits, had kicked her down some steps. The Princess Alice, after The liberal encouragement I have received and her marriage, will live at Frogmore, and as she is supposed to have inherited the talents and disposition of her father, in a great degree, she will be a real comfort to the Queen. But it is in the order of human events that a turn should occur in the tide of life. The Queen has been so remarkably blessed, her happiness so continuous, her feelings so untried, that a change seemed inevitable. Troublous times are looming in the distance for her and the country she reigns over. Lord Palmerston is not to be disturbed, I hear, so long as his health permits, him to wield the power he holds, so conservatives are pledged to support him in any party struggle, but death or disease may incapacitate him to-morrow, and then, with the occupant of the throne in such tribulation, trials of no ordinary nature may

GEN. BEAUREGARD'S ADVICE. We find the following in a letter to the Baton Rouge "Advocate" from a member of the Confederate Guards' Response Battalion. The letter is dated March 31st: General Beauregard and staff yesterday paid our battalion a special and friendly visit, and after shaking hands with the boys, he addressed us

"Boys, be patient; the spideris patient-it takes him a long time to weave his web, but he never fails tocatch his fly. We must imitate the spider -our web is nearly complete. In a few days you will have work to do; my advice to you is to keep cool-don't be in too great a hurry; take your time when the fight comes, which I think will be a few days, load and shoot slow and sim low. Follow this and history will have another victory to record for you." After another warm shake of the hand and a cordial, "God bless you," the General left us amidst the wildest applause of our boys. Although in the prime of life, Gen. Beauregard's head is now quite grey; his looks are thoughtful, but buoyant and confident. He possesses the whole confidence of the entire army, and is the idol of the Louisian-

GEN. PRICE IN MEMPHIS .- Gen. Sterling Price arrived in Memphis on the 10th inst., and was followed by a clamorous throng to the Gayoso Hotel, where, in response to the continuous cheering of the multitude, he addressed them in a few words. He said he felt deeply the compliment paid him by this demonstration, but would prefer demonstrating his gratitude to his fellow-countrymen on the battle field, where he expected soon to be heard from more favorably than from the stump The time for speechmaking had passed, and the time for action had arrived. He had commenced this service without men, money or munitions of war; now he could boast of a gallant band of true avidity." soldiers not inconsiderable in numbers, and unsurpassed in valor and zeal, who would stand by him, and he by them, to the end-for weal or for woe, come when that hour may. He had returned the arms and supplies he had borrowed to begin with, and still retained abundant supplies for the valorous sons of the West, won by them in the conflicts of the past for future use. He expecced soon to be nextd from in the thundering tones of the cannon, the roar of musketry, and the clashing of bayoners. Geu. Price looks to be about sixty years of age -remarkably large in person, with marked dignity of demeanor and marly bearing.

TENNESSEE.—A Yankee correspondent of the Louisville Journal, writing from the Tennessee Weldon and Columbia will be taken at local rates. river, classes the Unionists found in that section in this wise:

This invaluable class is composed-according to a careful analysis made by an eminent chemist on the spot-of ten parts unadulterated Andy Johnson Union men, ten of good lord and good devil-ites, five of spice, and seventy five of scallowag too lazy to run, and therefore disqualified for service in the secesh army, and too cowardly to steal on their own responsibility, but willing to be enrolled as "Home Guards," so as to plunder their neighbors under the Union flag.

The Post-office Rout Agent who arriveds here o-day, from Decatur, Ala., reports that at the time the Yankees captured Decatur, they took nineteen car leads of mails; also several mail bags from New Orleans. They also captured eight engines, and retook five hundred Yankee prisoners who were murching through that place ou their way to Alabama, and the Confederates escorting them. It is supposed that the mails contained correspondence, relating to the forts and defenses of New Orleans, and the commission of the new post master. The agent in charge of the mail sent from New Orleans had barely time enough to change the labels on two of the mail bags and send them back to Jackson, Miss., to be forwarded to Montgomery, Ala,-N.
