

RALEIGH, N. C. THEN AND NOW.

We showed not long since, in parallel columns, the opinion entertained by the Raleigh Standard of William A. Graham when he was a candidate for the office of Governor in 1846, and the opinion of the same gentleman entertained by the same paper in 1862, when said paper professed to be desirous of making William A. Graham Governor.

We propose to-day to show, in parallel columns, what a "Conservative" Holden thought of Mr. Vance when he was not a candidate for Governor, and when he was politically opposed to him, and what he thinks of Mr. V. now, when he is his favorite candidate for the gubernatorial chair.

From the Raleigh Standard of the 2d March 1862. "THE ELEMENTS OF A POLITICAL PARTY."

Mr. Vance is a man of talents, and with age, study, and experience, might possibly have placed himself in the rank of statesmen, a class by no means numerous, and a class as different from that of the mere politician as the diamond is from the paste that is made to imitate it.

Mr. Vance is a man of talents, and with age, study, and experience, might possibly have placed himself in the rank of statesmen, a class by no means numerous, and a class as different from that of the mere politician as the diamond is from the paste that is made to imitate it.

Mr. Vance is a man of talents, and with age, study, and experience, might possibly have placed himself in the rank of statesmen, a class by no means numerous, and a class as different from that of the mere politician as the diamond is from the paste that is made to imitate it.

Mr. Vance is a man of talents, and with age, study, and experience, might possibly have placed himself in the rank of statesmen, a class by no means numerous, and a class as different from that of the mere politician as the diamond is from the paste that is made to imitate it.

honors and patronage of the government. The Southern Know-Nothing also have two objects in view—one is to gratify their hatred of Democracy, and the other is to divide with their opposition brethren the honors and the spoils of office.

Here it will be seen that no longer ago than 1859, the now "genial, ingenuous and estimable" Mr. Vance was held up by the man who now ennobles him, to the reprobation of the people of this State, as the friend and co-laborer of the Black Republicans.

In 1859, when the Standard was charging infidelity to the South upon Mr. Vance, we regarded him as a "genial, estimable and ingenuous man," who was as true to the South as any of her sons, and now, in 1862, we do not hesitate to say that our opinion of Mr. Vance is unchanged.

As to Mr. Vance's military career, we have seen nothing in it to except to or cavil at. He, we know, is a brave and intelligent man, and with these two qualities will make a good soldier and officer.

Mr. Vance is a man of talents, and with age, study, and experience, might possibly have placed himself in the rank of statesmen, a class by no means numerous, and a class as different from that of the mere politician as the diamond is from the paste that is made to imitate it.

Mr. Vance is a man of talents, and with age, study, and experience, might possibly have placed himself in the rank of statesmen, a class by no means numerous, and a class as different from that of the mere politician as the diamond is from the paste that is made to imitate it.

Mr. Vance is a man of talents, and with age, study, and experience, might possibly have placed himself in the rank of statesmen, a class by no means numerous, and a class as different from that of the mere politician as the diamond is from the paste that is made to imitate it.

Mr. Vance is a man of talents, and with age, study, and experience, might possibly have placed himself in the rank of statesmen, a class by no means numerous, and a class as different from that of the mere politician as the diamond is from the paste that is made to imitate it.

Mr. Vance is a man of talents, and with age, study, and experience, might possibly have placed himself in the rank of statesmen, a class by no means numerous, and a class as different from that of the mere politician as the diamond is from the paste that is made to imitate it.

THE WHEREABOUTS OF McCLELLAN.

By the last accounts it will be seen that the great McClellan, after undergoing a series of thrashings running through most of the longest days of the year, has at last unscathed his army under the protection of his gunboats, and in a position of considerable natural strength.

The driving back of McClellan to a considerable distance from Richmond and leaving him up in a corner, and the re-possession by us of the York River, Central, and Fredericksburg Railroads, have re-opened to Richmond a supply of those articles of food the want of which for some weeks had been to the great detriment of our army.

The following letter has been kindly furnished us for publication by Governor Clarke. That the request made by the survivors of the gallant "Fourth" will be speedily complied with we do not entertain a doubt.

As to Mr. Vance's military career, we have seen nothing in it to except to or cavil at. He, we know, is a brave and intelligent man, and with these two qualities will make a good soldier and officer.

Mr. Vance is a man of talents, and with age, study, and experience, might possibly have placed himself in the rank of statesmen, a class by no means numerous, and a class as different from that of the mere politician as the diamond is from the paste that is made to imitate it.

Mr. Vance is a man of talents, and with age, study, and experience, might possibly have placed himself in the rank of statesmen, a class by no means numerous, and a class as different from that of the mere politician as the diamond is from the paste that is made to imitate it.

Mr. Vance is a man of talents, and with age, study, and experience, might possibly have placed himself in the rank of statesmen, a class by no means numerous, and a class as different from that of the mere politician as the diamond is from the paste that is made to imitate it.

Mr. Vance is a man of talents, and with age, study, and experience, might possibly have placed himself in the rank of statesmen, a class by no means numerous, and a class as different from that of the mere politician as the diamond is from the paste that is made to imitate it.

Mr. Vance is a man of talents, and with age, study, and experience, might possibly have placed himself in the rank of statesmen, a class by no means numerous, and a class as different from that of the mere politician as the diamond is from the paste that is made to imitate it.

THE BATTLE BELOW RICHMOND.

We claim to have been a better democrat than the Enguiner, for its Editor booted at Baltimore and we did not. -Standard.

There is nothing of exciting interest to report relative to the situation of affairs yesterday, nor has there been any sanguinary engagement between the contending armies since the great conflict of Tuesday last.

At last accounts a large fleet of Federal gunboats and transports were lying between Berkeley and Westover. No firing was heard on the river yesterday morning.

At last accounts a large fleet of Federal gunboats and transports were lying between Berkeley and Westover. No firing was heard on the river yesterday morning.

At last accounts a large fleet of Federal gunboats and transports were lying between Berkeley and Westover. No firing was heard on the river yesterday morning.

At last accounts a large fleet of Federal gunboats and transports were lying between Berkeley and Westover. No firing was heard on the river yesterday morning.

At last accounts a large fleet of Federal gunboats and transports were lying between Berkeley and Westover. No firing was heard on the river yesterday morning.

At last accounts a large fleet of Federal gunboats and transports were lying between Berkeley and Westover. No firing was heard on the river yesterday morning.

At last accounts a large fleet of Federal gunboats and transports were lying between Berkeley and Westover. No firing was heard on the river yesterday morning.

THE BATTLE BELOW RICHMOND.

There is nothing of exciting interest to report relative to the situation of affairs yesterday, nor has there been any sanguinary engagement between the contending armies since the great conflict of Tuesday last.

At last accounts a large fleet of Federal gunboats and transports were lying between Berkeley and Westover. No firing was heard on the river yesterday morning.

At last accounts a large fleet of Federal gunboats and transports were lying between Berkeley and Westover. No firing was heard on the river yesterday morning.

At last accounts a large fleet of Federal gunboats and transports were lying between Berkeley and Westover. No firing was heard on the river yesterday morning.

At last accounts a large fleet of Federal gunboats and transports were lying between Berkeley and Westover. No firing was heard on the river yesterday morning.

At last accounts a large fleet of Federal gunboats and transports were lying between Berkeley and Westover. No firing was heard on the river yesterday morning.

At last accounts a large fleet of Federal gunboats and transports were lying between Berkeley and Westover. No firing was heard on the river yesterday morning.

At last accounts a large fleet of Federal gunboats and transports were lying between Berkeley and Westover. No firing was heard on the river yesterday morning.

At last accounts a large fleet of Federal gunboats and transports were lying between Berkeley and Westover. No firing was heard on the river yesterday morning.

THE LAMENTED GRIFFITH.

Gen. Griffith, a distinguished son of Mississippi, was wounded in the fight of Sunday, died during the ensuing night. His remains were yesterday brought to the residence of Mr. James Parham, where they were visited by President Davis, the friends of the South, and the friends of the North.

Gen. Griffith, a distinguished son of Mississippi, was wounded in the fight of Sunday, died during the ensuing night. His remains were yesterday brought to the residence of Mr. James Parham, where they were visited by President Davis, the friends of the South, and the friends of the North.

Gen. Griffith, a distinguished son of Mississippi, was wounded in the fight of Sunday, died during the ensuing night. His remains were yesterday brought to the residence of Mr. James Parham, where they were visited by President Davis, the friends of the South, and the friends of the North.

Gen. Griffith, a distinguished son of Mississippi, was wounded in the fight of Sunday, died during the ensuing night. His remains were yesterday brought to the residence of Mr. James Parham, where they were visited by President Davis, the friends of the South, and the friends of the North.

Gen. Griffith, a distinguished son of Mississippi, was wounded in the fight of Sunday, died during the ensuing night. His remains were yesterday brought to the residence of Mr. James Parham, where they were visited by President Davis, the friends of the South, and the friends of the North.

Gen. Griffith, a distinguished son of Mississippi, was wounded in the fight of Sunday, died during the ensuing night. His remains were yesterday brought to the residence of Mr. James Parham, where they were visited by President Davis, the friends of the South, and the friends of the North.

Gen. Griffith, a distinguished son of Mississippi, was wounded in the fight of Sunday, died during the ensuing night. His remains were yesterday brought to the residence of Mr. James Parham, where they were visited by President Davis, the friends of the South, and the friends of the North.

Gen. Griffith, a distinguished son of Mississippi, was wounded in the fight of Sunday, died during the ensuing night. His remains were yesterday brought to the residence of Mr. James Parham, where they were visited by President Davis, the friends of the South, and the friends of the North.

Gen. Griffith, a distinguished son of Mississippi, was wounded in the fight of Sunday, died during the ensuing night. His remains were yesterday brought to the residence of Mr. James Parham, where they were visited by President Davis, the friends of the South, and the friends of the North.

At last accounts a large fleet of Federal gunboats and transports were lying between Berkeley and Westover. No firing was heard on the river yesterday morning.