POETRY.

A PORTRAIT. American rules his soul-

It is his master passion; though his heart Answers spontaneously the frequent calls Made by compassion and humanity, And from his hand the ready tribute flows. Nature designed him not for selfish things : He was not formed to coldly calculate, And weigh each rising feeling in the scale Of policy and prudence; but the world Has done its work on his aspiring mind. There are some traits of innate nobleness, Some gleams of natural feeling, which break forth At intervals, when for a moment he Ls off his guard-as if 'twere but to show That where all faults are not all hidden, there Virtue shines out more brightly. 'Tis his aim To have no enemies; and it may be That he has fewer than his fellow men. To please, is the sole study of his life-The same to all, on all alike he smiles: But 'tis not for a smile to win a heart. Moments there are when it may be the dupe Of its own fancy, in the deep romance Of youthful feeling and credulity. But still there must be something to support Imagination's power; it will not hold Its empire o'er a vision long. Life's dreams Are changeful things: they wear a thousand

In their fantastic visits; and without Some slight foundation in reality, They are the very essence of caprice-Taking from one, the qualities they gave, To fix them on another, till they meet With something to fill up their emptiness, And turn them to those deep consuming thoughts Which feed upon the heart. His is the power

To charm the fancy, and to fill the mind With images of beauty-not to hold The silent thoughts in bondage. Would he thus Unlock the springs of feeling, he must feel. And yet what matters it, while still he bows At fashion's shrine: many its votaries: And while he mingles in the giddy train, What need is there of nature? 'Tis enough To learn the lesson, and to act the part. He is not what he might be. He withholds The confidence which could impart a charm To conversation, and reflects too much On what he means to say before he speaks. He trusts no word on the free winds but such As might be safely blown throughout the world. And when we seek for candour, we but find Caution and cold reserve; and friendship feels Her warmth congealed, and, calm and passionless, Loses, beneath his glance, her strength and power. Honour, and principle, and truth, are his; And polish, and refinment, and good sense; But every thing is studied; and in vain We look to read the heart-each avenue Is closely guarded with a vigilance Unequalled. Art is baffled still by art. Prudence stands sentinel at every turn, And those who know him best, still know him not. His step is on the ladder which leads up To fortune and to fame; nor will he stoop Even for happiness, till he has won The destined goal. Bright are thy gilded dreams,

Oh vain ambition !- but too soon they break Like ocean's sparkling waves, upon the shore. Yet still, thy ignis-fatus light lures on Unnumbered followers, who spend their youth In grasping at a shadow; till at last And sickened, and disgusted, and surprised, They turn and find the phantom they pursued Was disappointment. ESTELLE.

THE MYSTERIOUS WEDDING A DANISH STORY-BY STEFFENS.

On the north side of Zealand stretches a small fertile peninsula, studded with hamlets, and connected with the main land by a narrow strip of waste ground. Beyond the only town which this little peninsula Cattegat, and presents an awfully wild and sterile appearance. The living sands have here obligerated every trace of vegetation; and the hurricanes which blow from all points of the ocean, are constantly operating a change on the fluctuating surface of the desert, whose hills of sand rise and fall with a motion as incessant as that of the waves sion of the horrid action. which roar around them. In travelling through this country, I spent upwards of an hour in this district, and never shall I forget the impression which the scene made upon my mind. While riding along through the desolate region, a thunder-storm rose over the ocean, towards the north; the waves roared, the clouds scudded along in gloomy masses before the wind, the sky grew every instant more dark, " menacing earth and sea;" the sand began to move in increasing volumes under my horse's feet, a whirlwind arose and filled the atmosphere with dust, the traces of the path became invisible, while air, earth, and occan seemed mingled and blended together, every object being involved in a cloud of dust and vapor. I could not discern the slightest trace of life or vegetation around the dismal scene; the storm roared above me, the waves of the sea lashed mournfully against the shores, the thunder rolled in the distance, and scarcely could the lurid lightning flash pierce the heavy cloud of sand which whirled around me .-My danger became evident and extreme;but a sudden shower of rain laid the sand and enabled me to push my way to the little town. The storm I had just encountered was a horrid mingling of all elements. An and her arms hung motionless at her side as earthquake has been described as the sigh she kneeled before the altar; terror seemed which troubled nature heaves from the depth of her bosom; perhaps not more fan- as her vital powers in deep lethargy. cifully might this chaotic tempest have tyand grief, the voice of conscience threatening like the thunder, and her awful anticipations casting a lurid light over the gloomy fixed immovably on the ground. spirit,-till at last the long-sealed up sourneath their waves.
