NEW GOYSTAOP BEEDS

THE MOTHER'S MORNING KISS

BY MES BEMANS. Come hither, my fair child, and let me kiss Thy rosy lips, steep'd in their morning dew; And on their brightness gazing, taste that bliss A mother feels, when o'er her raptur'd view Each beauty riper grows: the graceful hue Of health sits blushing on thy tender cheek, And in the axure of thine eye's soft blue. h'lat forms of joy, such as I hope to seek In all thy future days: a hope how frail and weak!

Ah no!-the current of thy after years. Can never flow so pute as at its apring; But in its silent progress downwards, tears Will mingle too, and all their wormwood bring. I frembling think affliction's deepest sting
May pierce thy soul, when she, around whose form Thy little arms in playful funduess oling, Can offer thee no more her bosom warm To solace all thy woes, and shield thee from the

That rose-queen of the blooming coronal Of wild flowers waving in thy golden bair-Behold how soon its robes of damask full. And cease to shed their perfume on the air. Leaving the parent tendril lone and bare ! Alas! the ills which wait thee in life's scene May in that flower their darken'd emblem bear, When blighted hopes of joy, with pangs unseen, Blanch thy young virgin cheek, and steal its ripen'd

My yearning heart in melancholy mood Itself with fancied agony is rending; Let me no longer o'er such phrenzies broad. But watch thee, my sweet love, whilst lowly bending, Thou lispeth forth thy morning prayer, and blending With thy bright upward glance such radiance mild It seems as if in thee from heaven descending (Fair Iris of my life!) an angel smiled, And whisper'd peace and joy -Oh! thou art safe my child

AUTHORLAND.

To me the happiest way in which one can pass a winter is to take possession of a snug little room, with a window looking out upon with Robinson Crusoe on his desert island, the South; across which, when the sun in its though it is true that by some magic I have decline shines too glaringly, you may drop been spending my evenings in the Eastern the heavy folds of a damask curtain so that a land, where I have been listening to the Armellowy rose tint is given to the light. At abian tales, till Haroun Alraschid has be the north end of the room, an old fashioned come, in my eyes, as living a personage as open Franklin stove, in which blaze some President Taylor, and the streets and squares pine and hickory knots (I like a wool-are of Bagdad are as familiar to me as the parks greatly!) shall lend a pleasant warmth unto the apartment. A polished brass-fender shall crescent it about to prevent the sparks from flying into the room to the danger of the Kidminster that covers the floor. Upon the fender, while seated cosily in your easy chair. you may rest your feet to toast them before the glowing fire ; or, when sufficiently warm, I remember I did years agone, over the sadyou may bury them, encased in their worked slippers-the gift of some fair maiden-deep within the soft rug spread out before you. Should the fire be too warm, draw the firescreen, with its gay and merry devices. between it and you. If you can by any means prevail upon a cricket to spend the winter with you, lodged in the warmest corner of the amused fire-place, do so; it will gladden your heart with its song and be a bert's birth day. It is called the "Inexcheerful companion; if not, a little water forever supering in the iron vase placed on sure enough: the store, together with the hissing and snapping of the green branches on the coals, will e'en suffice. Clough's Bothie of Toper-ha-Fousich, a long vacation pastoral, written in hexameter, which contains many a witty allusion and graceful idea; Bulwer's New Timon, a romance of London, worthy of more than one perusal. I also hope occasionally to dip into an English copy of Crabbe's poems, to find something entertaining and amusing in the Borough' and 'Tales of the Hall;' and I shall not forget Street's Frontenac, just published, nor yet my old favorite Festus. What with Histories, Travels and Biographies, I pe to pass an agreeuble winter. Novels I cannot bear to read aloud; my hearers want to get on faster than is compatible with my idea of the dignity which is becoming in a reader. They should alway, methinks, be read silently and by one's self. The last novel that I attempted to read aloud was 'The Caxtons,' and I had only gotten as far as to where Pisistratus receives his name, when I stopped; but the next day, upon resuming, I found no less than three other copies in the house; my sister Kate had one, cousin Mary the second, and brother Tom the third; and they were all far ahead of me.
