POETRY.

STANZAS.
Cling not to life, thou dreamer!—soon In fatal visions pass away,
And at night's pensive hour, the moon Will smile above thy wailing cry, True, when its buds are fair and bright, When joy, like hope, within thee springs, Thou see'st not of the coming night, Where death his shadowy mantle flings.

But there's an hour, when all must come With faint dismay to the sick hour, When clouds of gloom surround thee, Whose mournful pall may never depart.
Yes!—it must come!—the hour of death,
With its chill milder on thy cheek, With anguish in the struggling breath—Vain words, which nature may not speak.

Cling not to earth—thou who hast given Thy heart to love's deep mystery—Thou who hast found a heaven in heaven, Launch not thy bark upon that sea,
And gaze not on that flowery shore, Alas! how soon the insatiate grave Will quench thy raptures evermore!

As ere the light had beamed, a cloud Will gather in thy being's sky;
And hope will fade in the dim shroud Which hangs o'er mortal destiny;
When wild, warm sighs be soon forgot, Grief's burning tear for joy's will fall,
And e'er the sweet "forget-me-not"
Will twine the night-shade's coronal!

Cling not to life—it hath a ray Which wakens love and hope to dwell In the young heart a little day, Then fades the rapt, enchanted spell!
How soon the time will roll on,
When their charmed days have ceased to bloom!
The light of joy existence gone, Clasped in oblivion's chill arms!

Oh, let the soul its sorrows bear, But cling not to life's changeful road.
How sweet to roam, in spirit, where We drink the peace which springs from God!
There is a faith, whose every beam Is like a voice in every ear, Which bids the soul no more to dream Of fading earth, but cling to heaven. W. G. C.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE CLOSE OF THE YEAR.

BY THE REV. WALTER COLTON.

The change that has come upon nature—The blight of its vernal beauty, the falling of the leaves, the departure of the birds, and the plaint of the raven, struggling with the icy chain of winter, speak a moral to man.
They remind him of the time when he, too, must undergo a fearful change; when the light of his countenance will be darkened, the elastic energies of his limbs be relaxed, and his frame, pulseless and cold, be consigned to its couch of clay. Nor will he come up from his sepulchre to share the renewing influences of the year: the flowers may again Garland the earth, the liberated streams exultingly show in their courses, and the birds return in their renovated plumage; but he will ever remain in the dark and silent prison of his grave. Remembrance may go there and number over his virtues, but the whisper will not reach his ear; affection may go there to linger and weep, but he will know it not; they whom he has left here among the living may grieve down on the breathless hearse to join him, but there will be no greeting, no question, no reply: there is no voice, nor any that can answer, in the grave; nothing stirs there, save the worm, fretting the shroud, or the rail falling through the coffin's decay.

And is this the end, the all of man?
The gloomy catastrophe in which terminate ever his existence and his hopes? Is there no re-creation for him, no awakening time when he shall bloom again? Yes, the long, leafless winter of his grave passed, he will come forth in the verdure of an imperishable life, a stranger to change, decay, and death. No outward disasters can reach him more. The monuments he has reared may crumble, the mountains on which he has reared may fall into the valleys, and the planets be shaken from their spheres, but their ruin will not evade the repose or terror of his condition. His portion will be a felicity which no event can heighten, or a despair which nothing can relieve. Death is therefore invested, not only with the terrors of the grave, but with all the solemnity which can be given it by ages of happiness or woe. Widely different, however, are the aspects which this mysterious event unfolds, as it presents itself to one unenlightened by revelation, and to one who is familiar with that volume in which life and immortality are brought to light.

A heathen, indeed, discovers, in the event of death, an extinction of animal life. He perceives that the warm companion of his heart is now cold, that the color has left his cheek, and the pulse is still. He fixes his eye on that brow where passion, pain and pleasure were once expressed, but it is now changeless as marble. He presses those pale lips, where the fervid pledges of affection were given and received, but an icy chill drives back the life from his. He speaks, he calls to his companion, but there is no answer—he would rouse from his deep slumber, but he moves only a mass of clay: he weeps, he wails, and commits his fond friend to the dust. But oh! the cruel! it is indeed to him the prison-house of death.
He sees there the being who sympathized with his sufferings, relieved his distress, and filled his heart with hope and gladness, now helpless, and a prey to the worm, beyond even a perception of his grief. Of the scenes upon the other side of the grave he knows nothing. He may conjecture that the spirit of his friend has escaped the body, but whether it has gone, and what are its pleasures or its pains, he cannot tell. He may imagine till imagination tires; he may conjecture till conjecture fails, but he can find nothing certain, nothing on which a wounded spirit can stay itself; all the future is wrapped in clouds and thick darkness.— Death is to him the most appalling catastrophe to which Omnipotence can subject a mortal.

To a man enlightened by revelation, death wears a less terrific aspect. He regards it as an event which indeed terminates animal existence, but which transmits the undying spirit to the retributions of eternity. He knows that the spirit of his deceased friend is not annihilated, that it does not slumber in the grave, that it is not capriciously confined in some frightful cavern, that it is not borne upon the howling tempest, but that it has passed into a state of rewards and penalties, where the character of its future existence is determined by the conduct of the man in this life. Here is certainly instead of conjecture—indestructible faith instead of vague possibility—immortal life instead of an endless dreamless sleep. A living child, with the Bible in his hands, can instruct a Plato respecting his soul. The conceptions of this sublime philosopher are vagaries when compared with the truths which the Bible places within the comprehension of the simplest mind. It is no wonder that the heathen are terrified at death: they know nothing beyond it; every ray of light that twinkles on that dark valley emanates from the Bible; and, but for this precious revelation, we might be wasting our energies in endless conjecture, or fastening our faith to a shapeless phantasy. A man who can look on the grave, and then on his Bible, without an emotion of gratitude to God, evinces a moral apathy, at which the very dead might murmur their shuddering remonstrance.

Death with the fearful realities that follow, comes, not only upon the aged in the midst of their sorrows, but upon the youth in the midst of his burning hopes, and upon infancy in the midst of its prattling gladness.
The warm precincts of life are assailed in every quarter by this indefatigable destroyer; breach after breach is made, till the destructive passes of the enemy enter at every point.
There is no security for us in the secrecy of the bed-chamber, the cheerfulness of the fresco, or the sanctity of the hallowed altar.
He enters the prison of ignominy, and carries off the chained culprit; he invades the palace of royalty, and strikes down the accursed monarch; he enters the ring of the rabble, and carries away the joyful subject of the vulgar shout; he creeps to the silent cloister of the student, and science weeps her favourite gone; he comes to the house of mourning, and wraps it in deeper weeds; he knocks at the hall of nuptial mirth, and carries off the bridegroom and the bride.— There is with him no respect of persons, age, or condition. The bloom of beauty withers at his approach, and the laurels of fame are blasted by his breath. He is the conqueror of all, and we must soon swell the lists of his pale realm.

But why should I speak of what may be, or must be? Let me look at what has been.
There are many seats at the social hearth now vacant, that were once filled with those whom he loved and revered. Their eye was ranging the deep vista of years that opened before them, when suddenly a shaft from an unseen quiver pierced their hearts. They cast a look of imploring helplessness around them, and expired. They looked upon a long, bright orb of their being was quenched forever. Scarce could they utter one parting admonition, on fond farewell, when they were chilled in death. They had deep affections, burning hopes, warm, manly sympathies, but all have passed to the extinguishing night of the grave. You remember with what alacrity they trod the field and the grove, how energetic was their footstep along the rushing shore of that giant stream. The grove shall still murmur in the ear of romantic youth, the wave still rush by the entranced beholder, but it will not be their ear upon which the stirred forest shall pour its wild numbers; it will not be their eye that shall be held in fixed attraction upon the majestic wave. They are in that realm where no footstep falls, no torrent's voice or echoing wood is ever heard, and where the silence can be broken only by the thunders of the last trumpet.

Gentlemen's Hats.
FALL STYLE FOR 1849.
R. TUCKER & SON, have just received their Fall supply of Fashionable Beaver and Superior Molekin Hats.
In the production of the article just mentioned, the most fashionable models of European Style have been consulted, and by uniting some of their most prominent features with American habit and taste, the present Fashion has been found, and its appropriateness to the other portions of the Gentlemen's Fall and Winter costume cannot fail to recommend it to the Fashionable Community.
Our customers and the public are respectfully invited to examine and purchase for themselves.

Livery Stable.
THE Subscriber after returning his grateful thanks to the Public, for the very liberal and generous patronage, hitherto extended to him, would respectfully give notice that he continues to produce his line of business, in all its branches, with promptness and efficiency. His Stables are clean and commodious, and his Outlets experienced and attentive; indeed no pains or expense have been or shall be spared, to render satisfaction to all who patronize his Establishment.
He will keep constantly on hand, for hire,
HACKS, BUGGIES, HARNESS AND
Saddles and Horses.
HORSES will be boarded by the day, week, month or year, on the most moderate terms. Drivers will find it a central position, and most convenient for effecting sales, and they will always find ample accommodation for any number of Horses, however large.
The Subscriber has also effected a new arrangement by which he will be enabled to keep new and old Booties, for sale, or for exchange—on moderate and accommodating terms. This is a new feature in his business.
The Subscriber hopes that his friends and the Public will continue to give him a trial. It is all that he asks.

Notice.
MR. HENRY L. OWEN respectfully informs his Carolina friends that he has removed from Petersburg to Richmond, where, under the firm of OWEN & BALLARD, he has opened a Wholesale and Retail Store; and thinks, if they will allow him the opportunity of supplying them with their Staple and Fancy Goods, that he can fall to satisfy them in style, quality and price.
