

POETRY.

The following stanza by the late P. P. Cook, of Winchester, Va., author of Florence Vane, the Fruitful Valley, etc., we take from the Southern Literary Messenger. They strike us as having a peculiar beauty.

"TO MY DAUGHTER LILY."
Six changeful years are gone, Lily, Since you were born to me, A darling to my mother good,
A happiness to me.
A little shivering, feeble thing You were to touch and view, But we could see a promise in Your baby eyes of blue.

"You fastened on our hearts, Lily, As day by day we grew,
And beauty grew upon your cheeks
And deepened in your eye;
A year made dimples in your hands And plumped your little feet,
And you had learned some merry ways Which we thought very sweet.

"And when the first sweet word, Lily, Your voice mouth learned to say,
Your mother kissed it fifty times,
And marked the famous day.
I know not even now, my dear,
If it was quite a word,
But your proud mother surely knew,
For she the sound had heard.

"When you were four years old, Lily, You were my little friend,
And we had walks and night plays And talks without an end.
You little one are sometimes wise,
For you are undeluded;
A state grown man will start to hear The strange words of a child.

"When care pressed on our house, Lily, Preserved making for the wrong Which feasted in the land—But when I read your young frank face Its meaning, sweet and good, My heart grew clear again—I felt my brotherhood.

"And sometimes it would be, Lily, My faith in God grew cold,
For I saw virtue go in rags,
And rise in cloth of gold;
But in your innocence, my child,
And in your mother's love,
I learned those lessons of the heart,
Which fasten it above.

"At last our cares are gone, Lily,
And peace is back again,
As you have seen the sun shine out After the gloomy rain;
In the good land where we were born We may be happy still,
A life of love will bless our home—
The house upon the hill.

"Thanks to your gentle face, Lily, In innocence was strong To keep me constant to the right, When tempted by the wrong.
The little ones were dear to him Who died upon the Road—I ask his gentle care for you And for your mother good."

MISCELLANEOUS.

From Chambers' Journal.
OUT OF WORK.
BY A WORKING MAN.

What a dreary phrase! How suggestive of hungry cravings and empty cupboards—of restless wanderings to and fro—of gloomy certainties and gloomier anticipations? How it disturbs a man's relations with society!
You have lost a vantage-ground. That which a week ago was possible is now impossible.
You are become a pariah without intending it; and you eye squalid people with a sort of shudder, half-persuaded that are long you will be of them. How grudging and envious of the world seems to have grown! You fancy that every one is as well aware of your feelings as you are yourself, and whatever discourse may be addressed to you sounds as if pointed with an embittered sting.

Nothing to do is bad enough; but out of work—hope-stifling words—take us far beyond, even across the Rubicon of desperation. And yet it is something to know what the phrase really does mean. It is a test to which you look back with feelings similar to those which possess the survivor of a shipwreck or other fearful calamity.— You would avoid the trial if possible; but having gone through it, are rather glad than reluctant at having endured it. Such reflections, it may be said, are not congenial yet it appears to me that human experience, if reviewed in a right spirit, can hardly fail to convey a useful lesson to those who read its history. My remarks are prompted by what has happened to myself, and may on that account, if on no other, present some slight claims to notice.

Out of work—how the grim reality haunts you, and how vain the efforts to shake it off!
Then you understand fully why Keats speaks of sleep as "comfortable," and join heartily with Sancha Panza in blessings on the man who invented sleep. The approach of bedtime was as welcome to me then as to a travel-worn pedestrian, and I shall never forget the soothing charm as the unconscious new of sleep gradually stole over me. Its influence would remain for a few brief moments on first awaking the next morning; but presently a vague apprehension of some impending ill would creep over me, and then, when fully awake, my heart swelled with gloom choking throb, and the leaden gloom settled down on my mind for the rest of the day.

How the moral reacts on the physical!— I used to walk briskly; now I went about with a hesitating step, and with a bearing that threatened to degenerate into a slouch.
I once believed my principles firm, and my faith in essential points sound—that my mind was made up as to social rights and moral duties—but the anchor-hold had suddenly given way, and I was adrift on a sea of uncertainties. I began to fancy myself ill-used, and that he was the wisest who, in the general scramble, grasped most. What had I done to be thus summarily deprived of ways and means, while men whom I thought not half so deserving were in full work? It was a hard question to answer under the circumstances, and harder still to acknowledge that I had no right to complain. Again, how many there were who could live in ease and comfort without laborious toil, while I, at the best of time, had nothing but my manual skill and a week's wages between my little house-hold and destitution. Turn it which way I would the idea was a harassing one.

The new spirit that possessed me seemed endowed with a resistless power of gravitation.
Society, in my view, had become inordinately selfish; how cleverly it had entrenched itself within laws and statutes, so that if I—bodingly anxious without the pale—ventured to help myself to the superabundance of others, it would be under peril of liberty!
What right had society to make a law which seemed expressly intended to aggravate my necessitous condition? Was I not the victim of a wanton injustice? Such thoughts as these made the work of temptation very easy for the tempter. Whatever might be society's notions on the matter, mine were, that retaliatory measures would be perfectly justifiable.

I walked about—it seemed to me that I sneaked—seeking for work. The masters surely had leagued against me; how, otherwise, could be explained their malicious negative to my inquiries? There was the roar and bustle of life and traffic in the thoroughfares, which made me loathe my forced idleness.
I had no business there; I was one too many in the world. How the aspect of affairs had altered! When in full work, I had not unfrequently considered it a hardship to work so many hours every week for so comparatively small a remuneration.
Now, in retrospect, the wage appeared an enviable fortune. Unconsciously to myself I was learning a significant lesson, fraught with profound instruction. Could I have appreciated it then as I do now, what a load of heartache it would have spared me?

Staying at home became irksome to me:
home appears somewhat strange to a workman on a working-day, and although my perambulation might be fruitless, it seemed that I was less idle when so occupied than when loitering within doors. Some mornings a faint revival of hope would make me feel certain of getting work in the course of the day, and I started forth animated by all my former confidence. Unsubstantial trust!
The first disappointment brought back all my irresolutions, all my bitter forebodings.
I had made up mind to brave it out, but the effort was too much for me. By a strange contradiction, too, notwithstanding my ear-ger desire to be again employed, there were times that I shrank from the thought of work as an owl shuns the sunlight.

How often the few remaining dollars were counted!—this was in New York. I despised myself for calculating on how little my family could be made to exist for a given time. My heart grew hard, and I often shuddered lest it should never soften again.— How slowly time passed! the days had grown longer on purpose to torment me, and the thousand bewildering thoughts that preyed upon me had ample leisure for their work.

Facile deservit avari; the phrase is as true now as when originally penned two thousand years ago. When first cast loose, I had felt sure of readily obtaining employment in my regular trade: the idea of condescending to inferior occupation was not to be for a moment entertained; it would damage my respectability, and disturb my self-esteem. But as the weary time wore on, the imperative necessity of providing food for a certain number of mouths every day, left no alternative, no possibility of over-scrupulousness in conventionalities. Respectability soon ceased to be a bug-bear; if cabinet-making was not to be had, I would take carpentry or jobbing-work. These failing, I next called on the shipwrights, with no better success; and then I bethought myself of trying other resources. It had always been one of my purposes and pleasures to see as much of other trades as possible, to visit and inspect all sorts of workshops, by which means their most obvious details had become familiar to me. I knew enough of shoemaking, bookbinding, printing, and some other trades, to be able to earn small wages at one of them. Should these also fail, it was all but certain that some sort of rude labor could be hunted up, which would enable me to wait for the next day's work.
I did not at first get through my task of seeking any kind of work. In some respects it was a repulsive task, for in the lower grade of shops and places of work I found a lower class of workmen; men on whom vice had set its mark, in whom depravity of mind and heart had become habitual, whose talk was as coarse as their looks. "Misery," says Shakespeare, "acquaints a man with strange bedfellows," and the dread of being compelled to mingle with debased associates increased my apprehensions. Necessity, however, has no law; a needy man must work, if not where he would, then where he can. It is a critical time; for there is more or less danger that contact and custom may lead a man to "put up" with his altered position, and gradually assimilate himself to it.
Many a man in such circumstances is apt to say, "What's the use of trying to keep a front to the world? Who cares whether I sink or swim? Let things take their course." However, on the occasion here more particularly referred to, my asking for work proved fruitless; whether it was that I looked too dejected or too unpractised, no one would employ me.

Who shall describe the prostration of heart and soul with which a man who has been wandering the whole day in a vain seeking for occupation returns at night-fall to his home? The dispiriting is occasionally so extreme, that for a time the solaces which they await him fail of their effect. It is in such circumstances that a man learns to appreciate rightly the value of a good wife; one to whom he can say with truth—When pain and anguish wring the brow, A ministering angel thou.

If she be kind and considerate, she will know that now is the time to display that affection which includes no thought of self in its warm desire for another's happiness.
True it is that she has her own share of the general trouble to bear; but she has not been worn out by a desponding walk; the rebuffs which solicitation seldom fails to evoke have not fallen on her personally; besides which, women are less irritated by adverse fortune than men. If, on such occasions, the wife will strive in sincerity to become a "ministering angel," how soon will her gentle words soothe the chafed spirit of her husband! With what blessedness her sympathy reanimates his hope and subdues his impatience! How his bitter thoughts take to flight and she suggests some comforting anticipation, and a brightening faith takes the place of despair! Ere long, the sustaining influences overmaster him; his children again claim his notice, and share his smile, and the dejected man finds in the light of home a solace for all his disquietude, so true is it that there is no condition of life without its bright side, no adverse circumstances without its compensating quality.— Herein the married man is more favorably situated than the unmarried—the one has a sustaining resource which the other knows nothing of. But on the other hand, no fate can be more deplorable than that of a man out of work with a comfortable home, a careless wife, and contumacious children.

It must be confessed that the general aspect of such a season of trial as above indicated is sufficiently discouraging; the downward tendency appears to be inevitable.— But there is a remedy; and this remedy is to be found in the spirit of self-reliance—in firm moral principle. And it will be a lasting satisfaction to me that I was enabled to apply this remedy, as a fragment of experience may serve to exemplify. The mental and physical condition which I have endeavored to portray in the foregoing paragraphs was not permanent—it was but the stunning effect which the natural reaction would presently dissipate.

One evening, after a long spell of involuntary idleness, I was seated thinking over my prospects, when all at once a thought struck me. "If no one would employ me, yet myself to work.
No sooner was the thought formed, than I started up to act upon it; one side of our kitchen was occupied by my bench; I got into working trim, sharpened my tools, and sawed a pair of ends for a chiffonier out of a mahogany slab which I had by me. These were planned and properly squared before I went to bed that night, and woodwork was the effect which manual labor produced.— Flung but a stone, the giant dies," says the poet and most truly; for as my limbs fell into their accustomed movements, and the shavings whirled from my plane, the anxious cares forsook me —and hope resumed her way strong in the victor of self-help. It is true the prospect of profit was but a distant one. That, however, was not the prime advantage, which lay in the restoration of mind to its healthy tone; still, in a large city purchasers are always to be found for fabricated wares, and a small gain is better than complete inaction. Besides which, a man who keeps himself employed is more ready to improve such opportunities as fall in his way, than one whose labors are weakened by idleness.

Idleness is by all means to be eschewed, and I would urge this point strongly on the attention of working men—my late companions. The resource which I adopted is such an obviously natural one, as to have since caused me much surprise that it did not occur to me with distinctness before the present week of my wanderings. And mine is no exceptional case; what I did myself is easier to buy a fixed habit, than to recover it if broken or lost; and no purpose, however slight, is to be despised which may serve to keep a man out of the way of evil associates or temptation. It would be well, also, if every artificer would learn something of other trades as well as his own, as he would thereby not only multiply his resources, but be better able to judge of fitting occupations for his children.

There is no reason either, as I afterwards had occasion to prove, why the days spent in looking for work should be altogether wasted. For, without losing sight of the main chance, I took occasion to visit the noteworthy parts of the city, public buildings, wharves, docks, and when practicable, factories and workshops. Nor did I confine myself to the town, but walked a few miles in various directions into the country, where, if nothing else was to be seen, there was always natural scenery, whose influence on the mind is ever quieting and elevating.

Lastly, in integrity of character consists the most potent remedy; it is the spring of all the rest. It is that which gives and maintains the energizing impulse. A wise writer has observed that "a straight line is the shortest in morals as well as in geometry." And so it is, even in a calculative point of view. The steady, honest workman is less exposed to loss of work or dismissal than he who has no settled conviction as to what is right or wrong; he is better able to keep money in his pocket, and to provide for his children. Here is so much clear gain; but when we come to higher views, how immeasurably superior does moral rectitude appear—that which springs from the soul, and aims at something beyond mere pecuniary advantage! And such a condition of mind and heart is possible to every man. I would endeavor to impress on all who shall read what I have here written, as an unfailing resource throughout the changeful circumstances of life. Possessed of that spirit of eternal justice which does as it would be done unto, a man will find that "out of work" is divested of half its bitterness, while a double blessing attends the awards of prosperity.
