[From the Louisville Journal] FRIENDSHIP OF NATURE.

Ye are not friendless whom the world deem loss To sympathy and love. Nor ye who stand like crumbling wrecks upon the shore of time, With hearts like the deep murmur of the sea, Mourning and sighing in a plaintive tone. Nor ve for whom on earth there dawns no day Brighter than one of weariness and woe, Still deepening into gloom. For thee the smiles Of friendship glow, unfading as the rays Of truth divine. The light of nature's soul Sull beams upon the universe, like dreams Of paradise that waft us up to God. The Queen of Night, her sisters train-the stars. And all those worlds that center round the sun, Are beacons of the soul.

Then wouldst thou feign To be forsaken here while dawns there still One planet fair, while burns there not for kings Than thee a brighter sphere! Then upward look, With eye of faith and tenderness and love-Make nature a companion. She will be A friend, more true to every vow than him Whose words are faithless and untrue. And when Grien age shall come upon thee, and the hand Of Death shall point thee to the voiceless tomb Then shall her requiem wake a d rgr-like song, Of music o'er thy grave. The voice of nature then Will sweeter seein than melody of Heaven, And every tongue of psalmody and praise Will chant the anthem of the universe In Eden tones.

Nature will spread her lap B-fore thee, laden with wealth and beauty. Her smiles will burst upon thee, like the beams Of morn upon the mountain's brow She will Give thee to drink the nectar of her joys. And bid the rose to flourish in thy path. Thy brow will wear the garland of her fame, Decked with more honor than a diamond. The rose may wither and the flower fade. And spring and summer with their beau'v pass, But these she will not yield more sorrowful Than thou that walketh meekly in her sphere. Yea! deeper far will be her grief than when The warrior and the statesmin pale in death Yield up a nation's fame. She will make thee More welcome far than him whose name and fame Are heraided abroad. Then, by the soul That inward beams with nature's mystic lore, hon may'st denict the course to lands above.

ENCOUNTER WITH A BUA-CON-

STRICTOR. I was just loading my fowling-piece, when observed an object on the white mud of the river, which gleamed in the sun's rays like a coil of silver; it was a serpent, bask- New Books Received this day and Count Oriolla fired at it from a distance of thirty or forty paces; he missed it with the first barrel, but wounded it in the tail with the second, which was charged with large shot No. 2. This seemed to rouse the creature; our boat grounded almost at the Wm. Maxwell Wood, M. D. same moment a little higher up than where the serpent lay, but some intervening bushes prevented our keeping it in sight. We all eagerly jumped into the river, tollowed by most of the crew; Counts Oriolia and Bismark were overboard in a minute, but as the real depth of the water seemed to me very problematical, I leaped quickly on to a withered branch of an enormous prostrate tree, which served as a bridge to the shore.
Although I had battle hope of coming the fifth the serpent, I advanced as fast as I could along the slippery trunk-a thing by no means easy, on account of my large India rubber shoes, which the swollen state of my feet had obliged me to wear for some weeks past. Just then I heard the report of a gun Evie" on my left, and, instantly jumping into the morass, warm from the sun's heat, sinking into it up to my knee at every step, and leaving one of my shoes in the mud, I hastened in the direction of the sound. Count Oriolla, who was the first to leap out of the boat, ran to the spot where he had wounded the serpent, and caught hold of the reptile as it was trying to escape into the forest. Sundenly it glided into the mud under the trunk of a prostrate tree, and at that instant the count struck it with a cutlass, which however, merely raised the skin. He then threw himself at full length upon the creature, as it was sliding away, and thrust the steel into its back, a few feet from the tail. The count vain'y tried to stop the monstrous reptile, which dragged him along, though the cutlass had pierced his body and entered the ground beneath. It was fortunate that the serpent did not bend backwards, and entwine its bold pursuer in its folds -the trunk of the tree, he faced the enemy, which, hissing, lifted his head erect in the a bout pourtant through the head, which laid
