POETRY.

FROM THE PERSIAN.
Once from a cloud a drop of rain Fell trembling in the sea, And when he saw the wide spread main, Shame veiled her modesty.
"What place in this wide sea have I?
What room is left for me?
Sure it were better that I die In this intensity!"
But while her self-abasing fear Is lowliness confessed, A shell received and welcomed her,
And pressed her to its breast.
And, nourished there, the drop became A pearl for royal eyes, Exalted by its lowly shame,
And humbled but to rise!

MISCELLANEOUS.

ONE DAY'S EXCURSION.
One day last summer I took my place in a Graveyard steamer, and found considerable amusement in watching the various characters.
Two persons in particular attracted my notice; one was a middle-aged gentleman, stout, rather surly, taciturn, who paid no attention to any living being on board; except a Newfoundland dog, that was panting and roaring about his tongue, roaming among the passengers, showing them out of his way, or frightening children, by suddenly covering their faces with one lick of his great tongue, and convincing nervous ladies that he was going mad, by the vigor with which he stuck out his legs while rolling upon the deck. His master eyed these pranks with a sly smile, and seemed quietly to enjoy the terrors occasioned by the antics of his burly friend. The other person whom I specially noticed was a very pretty and well-dressed lady. Young lady she would no doubt have been called, but that she had with her a little girl, about seven years old, who called her mama. She was evidently possessed of nerves; indeed, she seemed to be possessed by them, and their name was legion. Endless were the petty annoyances in which they involved her. But her keenest sufferings in the small way caused by the unwieldy gambols of Lion, the Newfoundland dog; and her incessant and puerile exclamations of terror, indignation, and spite, against the good-natured brute, kept up the sly, malicious smile upon the lips of his apparently unnoticed master. The little girl, on the contrary, had, to the increased alarm of the weak mother, made friends with the monster, and for a long time amused herself by throwing bits of biscuit to him to catch, which feat, notwithstanding the incorrectness of her aim, he managed to accomplish, by making a boisterous plunge to one side or the other; and when at last she tamely offered him a piece out of her hand, and he acknowledged the compliment by licking her face and rubbing his side against her, she almost pushed her down, the little creature fairly screamed with delight.
Her mother screamed too, but in one of the small, hysterical screams in which she was flood of indulging, and which was followed by an outburst of anger at Lion's audacity.
"Good gracious!" she exclaimed, "if that horrid creature should be mad, he'll have killed my child! How dirty he is, too!
Look at your pelisse, Adeline; see what a state it is in! How dare you play with that animal!"
This transition from hydrophobia to a sullen desire, was too much for Lion's master, and he burst into a loud laugh.
"I wish, sir," said the lady, snappishly, "that you would call away that nasty dog, instead of setting him on to annoy everybody who is not accustomed to have such dirty animals about them."
The gentleman said nothing, but bowed and walked forward; and I soon after saw him enjoying a cigar, while Lion played the agreeable, in his own rough fashion, to people who knew how to read the expression of his honest and intelligent physiognomy.
Little Adeline, deprived of the attraction which had fixed her attention to the inside of the boat, began to seek amusement in watching the foaming water, as it rushed from the paddle wheels, and danced in long lines behind them. She knelt on a shawl which a fellow-passenger had lent, as a cushion for her little knees, and leaned quietly over the side, watching the roaring water, as her mother was for a time relieved from the thousand mosquito-winged vexations which had hitherto beset her.
We were within a few miles of Graveyard. The tide was just at the full, and the broad expanse of the river lay around us in all its majesty; and to those who have ever beheld the Hudson or the Mississippi, old Father Thames is majestic, ay, and if we place in the balance the historic, political, and commercial importance of the transactions of which his broad breast is and has been the highway, our time-honored river will not lose in dignity even when compared with those giant floods of the west.
Such thoughts as these, however, did not trouble Adeline's pretty head, which began, I could see, to grow giddy with the continual whirl beneath her. A large sea-weed, caught her attention. It sank, then rose, turned around in a short eddy, and then dared out in the long wake that was left behind the steamer. She leaned forward to watch its progress further still—her neck was stretched—she lost her balance, and tumbled over into the roaring flood. In a moment all was confusion aboard. Men were shouting for ropes and boats to stop the steamer; cries of "A child overboard!"
"Who can swim?" and a thousand other cries and questionings; but, above all, were the poor mother's heart-rending shrieks, too pathetically earnest now; and she alone, in the fond, instinctive devotion of maternal love, heedless that even should she reach her child, she could only sink with her, determined to leap into the water to save her.

FANCY and STAPLE DRY GOODS, are now receiving their Spring and Summer supply for 1850. One of the Firm has just returned from New York, where he purchased a rich variety of Goods of this Spring's importations, before they had been picked over, and before the advance in price; and having thus had the choice of the large and splendid fresh arrivals, and the advantage of low
