POETRY.

FOR THE REGISTER. The evening Sun sheds his long lines of light, Athwart the wavy tops of balmy trees. That robe this lovely town in modest green, And in their grateful shade and coolness screen As quiet walks from the broad glare of day. These trees are social, and in whispers speak, Of souls attuned to harmony and love, That see not good alone in minted gold, Or palace reared in pride of gathered wealth ; But rather, in the sweet embowered home, Hemmed in by rose gemmed gardens, and o'ertopped By arched Elin or prou-I protective Oak, Find the best bliss .- content with competence. Shall manimon then apon a rushing steed. With hery breath exhaled from iron throat, Hourse clanking, shake the metal girded earth, And wheezing through the smoke begrimming air, Invade the precincts of these pesceful homes, And bid them yield their ground to magazines, With iron portals frong and massive walls, Teeming with products of remotest climes, Deriding simple nature's homely sweets, To pamper at expense, each curious want? Adown the near perspective see arise, The column'd Bank, the noisy mart, th' exchange, In rapid nozious growth. Where now the trees ? The tended gardens, where ? no more the breeze, Sways the green forest's coronals, in pride That here at least, the sons of men content, Were wise to live in peaceful competence. And healthful round of easy duties, diligent. At leisure-not driven mad by cruel Avarice Long rows to the remorseless axe have bowed. And fed the wintry fime. The garden nymphs, Affrighted fiee and seek retreats suburban ; Huge walls of brick, in servied ranks, attend, The order of the sordid devotees. Who hand to hand, with nicely measured force, Struggie to seize the golden gifts of gain: The furrewed brow and meagre palid cheek, Speak the stern agony and mental zeal. Of mammon's willing and obedient serfs ; But what avails all this? The charms of life With every heart-felt, home-felt pleasure dealt, Are these men sane, who give the soul's true life. To gain the treasures of the fleeting world ? They win, and hold them in their lightening grasp. Tenacious unto death. Then forth they go, Bereft, unfurnished, dwarfed and ignorant, Covering in miserable palsied fear. Who bore his front so loftily on earth, True merit blighting with his with'ring scorn, Now calls upon the inexorable rock, And obdurate mountain to conceal and crush. This scared, puny, unwarmed naked soul ! Take bred, fair town, and generous denizens, Erect no gorgeous fanes to idol Gods. Not slay in sacrifice the deathless soul to gain the treasures of the globed earth H. M. P. Yarbrough House, May 12.

A MISSOURI POLITICAL SPEECH. BY J. R. H., OF SHANDY HALL, MISSOURI. BROWN'S HOTEL, WASHINGTON CITY, D. C., May 13, 1850.

intended for Buncombe, I have concluded to send you the following spicy and patriotic effusion, originally intended for the same market, being an extract from a stump speech tecently delivered in Missouri, and leave it to you if it doesn't take the shine off any and it would just do him good to swing up thing that has emanated from this great focus a few thousand of them traitors, about as of wit and eloquence.

J. R. H. "Friends and feller citizens of this conlallule to, I say, a crisis has arriv. The wheels of our government has stopped-the mechanery's deranged--the runder's unshipped-the biler's busted-h-is afloat, and the river's risin'. Our glorious ship of State that, like a bob tailed gander,'s been foatin' majestically down the peaceful current of time, has had its harmony disturbed, and it's now driftin' with fearful rapidity tothreatenin' to dash everything in fundrigs, and pick itself up in the end a gone gos!in.
