THE STARS.

BY G. D. PRENTICE.

These burning stars, what are they?
I have dreamed
That they were blossoms on the tree of life;
Or glory, flung back from the outspread wings
Of God's archangels; or that you blue sky,
With all its banners, waving over the earth
Were but the far wall of heaven; and I have sat
Down to drink the gushing glory till I felt
That flash electric trembling with a deep
And strong vibration down the living wire
Of changeless passage—and my very pulse
Of beating high, as if a spring were there
To draw me up where I might ever roam
To dwell with the unfathomable vastness of the sky,
Midst the unnumbered billions of stars,
And dwell with those high stars, and see their light
Poured down upon the blessed earth like dew,
From the bright arms of Valdear. Beautiful stars,
What are ye? Beneath you like the deep
A faint that glimmers of the midnight moon!
Beneath the glimmers of the midnight moon!
And how your Elen tones are floating now
Above me like an element—so low
And wildly beautiful, I almost deem
I have the living harp of God,
O'er which the incensed winds of Elen stray
And waft such tones of mystic melody
As will might waft down to this dim world,
To fashion dreams of heaven. Peal on, peal on,
Ye harp of heaven!—for my life has caught
A portion of thy purity and power,
And gems that as a sweet and glorious tone
Of art-music: Blessed, blessed things!
Ye are in heaven and I on earth—my soul,
Beneath a whirl-wind's wash, can wander off
To your immortal realms; but I must feel,
Like you, my ancient Pleiad, from its height,
To dim its own and come where you repose,
And dwell on boundless heaven, like parted souls
On a eternity of blessedness.

THE BATTLE OF BUENA VISTA.

To the Editors of the Republic:
The beautiful allusion of Sir Henry L. Bulwer, in his late brilliant speech at Baltimore, to the battle of Buena Vista, associated with that of Agincourt, induces me to request the republication of the following letters, written at the time. Many who have read the narrative of that extraordinary event have not an adequate conception of the consequences depending on the result. During the war thirty letters were written by me, and fourteen of them have just been republished in this city in pamphlet form.
H. M. BRACKENRIDGE.

LETTER XIII.

March, 1847.
The accounts from the seat of war in the States of the Rio Grande are becoming every day more serious; perhaps, I should say, alarming. It is now placed beyond all doubt that Santa Anna, instead of throwing himself between the city of Mexico and the expected march of General Scott, has suddenly advanced on General Taylor at Saltillo. We now see the effect of weakening the army of the Rio Grande, under the supposition that the Mexican commander could make no other military movement than covering the national capital. The American general, by extraordinary exertion, has collected all his disposable force at the point where he can most advantageously arrest the march of Santa Anna; but his division does not exceed five thousand men, not more than half of them regulars, while the Mexican army is not short of twenty thousand, and by far the most formidable ever yet embodied in that country. We have every confidence in General Taylor and his gallant officers and soldiers; he is one of those whose resources of mind have always been brought out by emergencies, and always found equal to them; but it must be confessed, the odds, at present, are fearfully against him.

It is said, that General Taylor has received orders (perhaps discretionary) both from the War Department, and the commander-in-chief, to retreat to Monterey. This, I am confident, he will never do. He must meet Santa Anna on the edge of the desert of three hundred miles, which he is compelled to cross, and he will make his stand at the admirably chosen battle-field of Buena Vista, which, according to the description of Captain Hughes, is a defile just suited for any army like that of General Taylor to defend, and to withstand the shock of an attacking force four times its numbers. Here is exactly one of those cases where everything must be put to "the hazard of the die," or everything must be lost.

Let us for a moment consider the consequences of the retreat of Gen. Taylor to Monterey, or of his defeat at Buena Vista. Santa Anna, once at Saltillo, will find everything necessary to refresh his troops, after the sufferings and fatigues of their march. The retreat of the American general will be regarded as a victory for Santa Anna, and it will cause the rancheros of New Leon, Coahuila, and Tamaulipas, to rise en masse. General Urrea, it is said, is at the head of ten thousand men near Victoria, so that our army will be shut up in Monterey, and all communications cut off with the Rio Grande. It is true, a portion of General Taylor's force may be detached to defend some narrow pass between Monterey and Saltillo, and attempt to oppose the advance of Santa Anna. But may Monterey be turned by Urrea, and thus place himself in the rear of that detachment, while a portion of the Mexican army shall advance in front? Although Santa Anna may not be able to transport his artillery, it is impossible for him to enter the valley of the Rio Grande with his infantry and cavalry, by some circuitous way? I set up no pretensions to being a military critic; by suggestions are merely thrown out for what they are worth, and they may be worth nothing. But I can conceive it possible for Santa Anna, with his whole army, to enter New Leon and Tamaulipas, and the necessary consequence must be, that all our military stores at Camargo and Matamoros must fall into his hands. He will sweep the whole valley of the Rio Grande, and in all probability will not stop there, but cross into Texas, no matter how far, there being no force at any point capable of opposing his progress. Admit that these are bare possibilities, they may become probabilities, and probabilities may become realities.

The supposed retreat, or defeat of our army, will change the whole face of the war. Should either of these events take place, (and such is my confidence in General Taylor, that I firmly believe they will not,) then the descent on Vera Cruz, and the march to Mexico, under the commander-in-chief, will have to be abandoned, and a retrograde movement undertaken to the Rio Grande, which cannot be effected without great difficulty and delay.

Our whole country waits with breathless anxiety the issue of the conflict between General Taylor and Santa Anna. It is the turning point of this war—if our arms prove successful, there will be everything to hope, and peace will have been conquered; but if we fail, the prospect before us will be dark and gloomy indeed.

LETTER XIII.—THE BATTLE OF BUENA VISTA AND ITS RESULTS.

April, 1847.
Sir: We have at length authentic accounts of the great battle fought at Buena Vista; it is certainly one of the most extraordinary on record, and its consequences are even more important than the event itself. These are of such magnitude that Santa Anna never would have made his daring movement if he had not been certain of success. Who could have supposed that twenty thousand men, under a high state of discipline, and perfectly provided with everything necessary to constitute the army, cavalry, artillery, and infantry, should be totally defeated by two thousand five hundred regulars, and an equal number of volunteers? Such an idea certainly never entered the mind of any Mexican, at least. It appears that his army is entirely disorganized, and it is doubtful whether he will ever be able to reach San Luis with the fourth of those who marched from that place. But the moral influence throughout Mexico must be incalculable—the Montezuma said of the Spaniards: "The gods of the strangers are stronger than our gods."

The reliance of the Mexicans for the defence of the capital is destroyed and gone. Had Santa Anna been successful against Taylor, no other defence of the capital would have been necessary; the descent on Vera Cruz would have been at once abandoned, and our troops recalled for the purpose of covering our own frontier. Instead of being broken and dispirited, the Mexicans everywhere would have risen up in arms, and perhaps would, for the first time, have exhibited a national spirit—the contrary of this effect has been produced. It will require a prodigious effort, and much time, to organize another army; and the greater part will be new conscripts, if they can be dignified even with that name, where there is no voluntary enlistment, or fair and regular draft, but where the poor peasant is seized by force, and driven, tied with ropes, to the places of rendezvous, like a brute beast, to be beaten, and broken into the trade of war. And now from Tampico to Saltillo, from the Sierra Madre to the S. line, the war is over—all that is necessary is to consolidate the conquest of the beautiful country west of the Rio Grande.

I can readily conceive the effect of this uninterrupted series of successful military events, and extraordinary battles, both on the Mexican and the European mind. The slumbering military might existing in our republic, ready to be called forth by events, must strike Europeans with amazement; and its secret lies in the freedom of our institutions—the same which gave to Greece and Rome their preeminence. One trait has been exhibited in even a higher degree than in Greece—the emulation or rivalry of states; and even of a higher kind than that which was displayed at Plataea and Marathon; Kentucky has vied with South Carolina, and Massachusetts with Mississippi—may the cherished remembrance long serve to bind them together in fraternal affection! The battle of Palo Alto and Resaca were decisive as to the superiority of our arms, especially of our artillery, and of the inferiority of the enemy in cavalry, whose efficiency was so much overrated. At Monterey, with every advantage of numbers, walls, and fortresses, they were literally crushed; and then, to crown all, at Buena Vista, in the spite of the immense disparity, and the superiority of their arms, they were annihilated in the open field. Can it be possible that Mexico will not now sue for peace, and accept any terms we may choose to dictate? I have no doubt we shall soon hear of General Scott making good his landing at Vera Cruz, and taking the Castle of San Juan. We shall then hear the Mexican plenipotentiaries advancing towards him with the olive branch, before he takes up his line of march for the capital of the Aztecs. Surely they will not invite him "to revel in the halls of the Montezumas."

It must be admitted that Santa Anna, however detestable his character, has displayed great military talents. He led his troops to battle under circumstances which, he was well aware, would cause them to fight with confidence from their immense superiority of numbers, but rendered desperate by hunger and hope of booty, which he had promised them and which supplied the want of higher motives of action, such as inspired the superior race with which they had to contend. In the words of Byron:

Th' Assyrian came down like a wolf on the plain,
And the shepherd was prepared to receive him,
And drive him back howling to the desert.
The sudden retreat of General Taylor from his advanced position to this chosen battle-ground, no doubt unexpected, must have had the effect of disconcerting the enemy. By this meeting him at the edge of the desert, he availed himself, like a skilful commander, of all the advantages of circumstances. What events the war may bring forth, if it should continue, it is impossible to foretell, but it is certain that the series of victories which have been thus far achieved by him have not been surpassed in our military history, while that of Buena Vista stands unequalled.

[From the Opera of the "two SUITORS."

Translated on Fayetteville Street.
I dreamed that her ravishing glances fell
On me, the rapturous Beau at her side,
And I could not tell why the laughing Belle,
Had refused to become my bride.
But a single glance at my rival's Coat,
Told me there lay the strength of the game;
And I said if the Tailor in Town who can do it,
I'll have one exactly the same.
Then I dreamed that I searched the Town all over,
For the gem that would win her heart,
Till I found myself standing in front of the Store
Where clothing is fashioned by art;
And then I remembered that this was the place
Where the Coat of my rival was made,
And entering in, right before my face,
Lay a Broad-Coat, exactly the shade.
The Coat was sent home, and like Caesar I sped,
I came, and I saw, and I won;
For she smilingly said when I asked her to wed,
"What an elegant Coat you have on!"
Three days from that time, perhaps it was more,
I induced her to alter her name,
And I still buy my Coats at the very same Store,
And she loves me as ever the same.

Belvoir Classical School.

THIS institution is situated about two and a half miles from the village of Lenoir, Caldwell County, North Carolina. It has been in operation about five years, and is now in a more flourishing state than at any former period, the number of pupils having gradually increased. The location is very fine, and has proved itself remarkably healthy, not a solitary instance of sickness having occurred among the school's own children, or the pupils boarding in his family, since the commencement of the school. There is probably no other place in the State where boys are more pleasantly situated; more efficiently guarded against the temptations that beset the young; or where they can be more thoroughly educated at a little expense. They are prepared, if desired, for any College in the United States, or fitted to enter upon any profession, at the exceedingly moderate cost of $125 per annum. This charge covers all necessary School expenses, except books and Stationery. For full particulars, address the undersigned, at Belvoir, near Lenoir, Caldwell County, North Carolina.

THURSTON'S FOUNTAIN HOTEL,

(Formerly Belzhuover's),
Head of Light street, Baltimore St., BALTIMORE.

THE increased patronage of this long established and popular Hotel, under the management of its present proprietor, has inspired him with further energy and determination, and no expense or attention of his or that of his Assistants will be spared to maintain with the patrons of the "Fountain" the reputation it held all over the country, in its "palmy days" of Belzhuover's proprietorship.
To increase its former attractions and comforts, during the past season the Hotel has undergone many changes. The Proprietor having made heavy outlays in introducing some of the best and latest improvements—such, together with its central position, being located in the very heart of the business portion of the city, and near the centre of Baltimore Street, and within a few minutes walk of all the Depots and Steam Boat Landings, it invites the Merchant, the Traveller, the Artist, as well as the Man of Pleasure to make the FOUNTAIN HOTEL his home during his sojourn in Baltimore.
The Ladies' Department,
Containing Private Parlors, Saloons, Reception Rooms, Ordinary, and extensive suites of large and airy Chambers, fitted up in a style and elegance that will give satisfaction and comfort.
Purveyors are attached to the "Fountain," who may be recognized by the Badges on their Hats, and are always in the attendance at the different Deots and Steamboat Landings, who will receive Checks, take charge of the Baggage and convey it to the Hotel.
PHILAS THURSTON, Proprietor.
