POETRY.

III WERE A VOICE.

III were a voice, a persuasive voice,
That would be heard on the morning light,
I would fly on the wings of the morning light,
And speak to men with a gentle might,
And tell them to be true.

III were a voice, a consoling voice,
I'd fly on wings of air;
The homes of sorrow and grief I'd seek,
And calm and truthful words I'd speak
To save them from despair.

III were a voice, a convincing voice,
I'd travel with the wind,
And wherever I saw the nations torn
By warfare, jealousy, and scorn,
Or hatred of their kind,
I would fly, I would fly, on the thunder crash,
And to their blinded bosoms flash;
And all their evil thoughts subdued,
I'd teach them Christian brotherhood.

III were a voice, a pervading voice,
I would seek the king of earth;
I would fly, I would fly, on the wings of night,
And whisper words that should guide them right,
Lays of peace and truth;
I would fly, I would fly, on the wings of night,
And tell them things they never heard—
Truths which the ages age repeat—
Unknown to the statesmen at their feet.

III were a voice, an immortal voice,
I'd speak in the people's ear;
And whenever they shouted, "LIBERTY,"
Without deserving to be free,
I'd make their error clear.
I would fly, I would fly, on the wings of day,
Rebelling wrong on my world-wide way,
And making all the world rejoice,
I'd be a voice—an immortal voice.

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS.
Undoubtedly one of the greatest of Mr. Adams' unpopularity, was his cold, antipathetic manner, and the suspicion of selfishness it suggested, or at least aided greatly to confirm.

None approached Mr. Adams but to recede. He never succeeded, he never tried to conciliate. He seemed one of those persons—not rare on earth—whose enjoyment stops in themselves; who find no pleasure in the indulgence of social feelings, and cherish no hope but self gratification.

Friendship which responds alike to good or adverse fortune, which removes us from entire isolation, expands the heart, lends new force to genius, and a nobler expression to thought, he never seemed capable of comprehending.

His mind, wonderfully precocious, was developed at the expense of heart. Undue exercise of the one, as happens with the limbs of the body, dwarfed or weakened the other. He could elaborate vast schemes of political aggrandizement, construct stupendous tomes of incontrovertible fact, establish or demolish theories of perplexing subtlety; but he was ignorant of an unselfish emotion, incapable of an ennobling expression, and constitutionally insensible to other than personal hopes and purposes.

All political dogmas, creeds and parties, were held by him in like consideration. He found them all equally fallacious and equally useful. He sacrificed no principles in espousing or repudiating either or all, for he had no principle to sacrifice. Without violence to his feeling or judgment, he admitted or rejected propositions and measures. He knew but one test of their soundness; how far they were useful, so far and they were right.

In whatever other respect he resembled Calistocensis, in one he differed with him materially. The vicia canina never pleased him. The theory that failed was to him illogical; the party that fell, unprincipled.

This intense concentration of self upon self gave character to his countenance, manner, and habits. He seemed as cold, passionless and inscrutable as the Egyptian Sphinx, whose fate, too, his own resembled. He was successful, while his secret was undiscovered, but that once exposed, he sank forever.

A disposition like his was his own Nemesis. Ever grasping at honors, success rather exasperated than satisfied him. While there was a step still higher, he was restless, discontented, morose, till he reached it; and when reached, the fear of its loss was greater than the pleasure of its enjoyment, and kept his mind in a constant turbulence. A want of sympathy for others, deadened his own sense of its elevation; he knew not the increase of gratification from reflection. His merit, he thought provoked service, which like virtue, was its own reward. He therefore felt no gratitude, and acknowledged in his favors no distinction between friend and enemy.

Success made him ungrateful, and defeat vindictive; the one he easily forgot, the other he never forgave.

This harshness of character developed itself in his writings. Future ages no less than the present will suffer from its expression. A severe and unyielding logic pervades and oppresses all his productions. There is nothing to move the affections, to rouse the fancy, or open the heart, in any. In all the mighty volumes of lectures, essays, correspondence, state papers and speeches with which he has terrified mankind, not a glorious sentiment, magnanimous idea, or soul stirring expression occurs. They are all lava like, destroying every thing like fertilization.

Such a character could secure no permanent popularity. It was only to be appreciated to be hated; and the admiration will be compelled to record, among the most prominent causes of Mr. Adams' ultimate defeat, his selfish cold, unsympathetic heart, characterizing manner and action.

GEN. JACKSON.
His successful career was cast in a different mould. Some virtues he had, and others he assumed. He was frank, affable, and impressive; and if not always sincere, always had the appearance of sincerity. It was easier to pardon his vices, than to acknowledge the virtues of his rival; the arrogance of the latter offending self love, more than the former, the moral sense.

It is not to be denied however, that he had one element of popularity which his opponent needed. This was his brilliant military reputation. His courage and conduct in several severe emergencies, and more particularly in one crisis of our public affairs, during the last war with Great Britain, had gained him the confidence and gratitude of his countrymen. This element of strength had been sensibly felt in the preceding canvass, and was perhaps the best solution of the almost incredible popularity which he enjoyed.

Still his military achievements, dazzling as they were, did not constitute his sole claim to popular favor. He had filled high stations in civil life, in National as well as in State Government; in all of which he had given evidence of a determined will, an honest purpose, and sagacious judgment, that commanded the good will of all classes. His character for moral, physical, and intellectual energy was known everywhere. He was thought to possess, too, qualities of mind rare in his combination. And hence there was a conviction, no more earnest than general, with the well informed no less than with the vulgar, that he could cultivate with equal success the somewhat hostile arts of war and peace.

COL. BENTON.
Benton discharged all sorts of missiles at the head of an adversary, like a catapult—Tropes, metaphors, similes, unsavory allusions, vituperative epithets, damatory personalities, he hurled upon the victim of his temporary anger. He neither sought or gave quarter; one of the regular Black Hussars of debate. His manner, if possible, was yet more belligerent than either. His whole attitude was defiance, and each gesture a provocation. An indifferent auditor might suppose from the extravagance of his manner and the language occasionally, that he was "running a muck." Habet famum in cornu, was at such times the proper solution of his conduct.

His speech was as often extraordinary as his manner. He brought together such a mass of random, gesticulations, over-whelming the subject matter in its accidents, so much unless accumulation, disjointed and inconsequent facts, impertinent allusions, and loose though labored analogies, one could not but imagine that he had made a foray into the territory of history, and seized upon booty, of which he neither knew the value, nor cared for the destination.

Too often, whatever there was of invincible logic in his declamation, was lost in diffuse speech, in useless generalities, unconnected episodes, and uncalculated personalities. His egotism at this time was almost ferocious; it penetrated every part of his speech and made it sometimes absurd, sometimes farcical and always offensive. But whenever for a time he forgot himself in his subject, and became wholly absorbed in its consideration, he was an antagonist not to be despised. He had read much, he had observed much, he had hoarded much; and all he had read, observed, or hoarded, he held at a moment's command. If he could but bring his facts and illustrations into line, so as to bear down in compact array upon the enemy's centre, they pierced it and secured victory. But it was unfortunate for him that his facts, undisciplined and irregular, hung back upon the very point of engagement, and recoiled, like elephants in Indian armies, upon their own friends.

I speak of him as he was. Twenty years have passed since this debate took place. The closer study of mankind, of books, and himself, has liberalized his temper, chastened his style, and subdued his manner. He commits no such solecisms of thought or conduct as formerly. He arrogates less for his own position now, concedes more to his opponent's. His speech is less discursive and more argumentative; it neglects persons and embraces propositions; is more suggestive, logical, and final. Still, though his deportment has more suavity, his manner more amenity, and his speech less personality than of old, he does not roar you now as gently an 'twere any nightingale. He is Boanerges still.

FALL STOCK

Drugs, Medicines, Paints, Dyes, &c.
THE undersigned are now receiving their extensive Stock of Medicines, Paints, Dye-Staffs, Perfumery, &c. for the fall trade, and are prepared to offer to Merchants, Physicians, and others, such inducements as cannot fail to please.

All our Medicines are warranted of the best quality to be obtained in any market; and as the stock has been laid in by one of the firm in person, at the lowest package prices, we are enabled to compete favorably with the jobbing houses of the Northern Cities, and thus save to the purchaser the expense of freight and forwarding.

Orders from Physicians will be executed in the best style, and sent to any part of the Country.

PROSPECTUS OF THE WHIG BANNER.

THE undersigned purposes to establish, in the town of Halifax, a Weekly Newspaper under the above title.
Believing, as we do, that the principles of the Whig party are best calculated to sustain the honor and promote the prosperity of the whole country, we will ever give them, through the columns of the Banner, a zealous and unwavering support. At the same time we are determined never to deny justice to a political opponent, nor to forget the courtesy which is due to our brethren of the Press.

The columns of the "Banner" will not be entirely taken up with the discussion of political subjects; on the contrary a large space will be devoted to the interests of Agriculture, to Literary Articles, original and select; and to the news of the day generally. By this means it is hoped to make the Banner a family, as well as a political Paper.

The publication will be commenced in the first week of January, 1851. Great attention will be paid to the Mechanical department of the Paper, and it will be printed and sent to subscribers at $3.50 in advance or at $5.00 if not paid within three months from the receipt of the first number.
