GEN. HOWARD'S ADDRESS LAST NIGHT Interesting Speeches by Gen. Dockery

The Condition of the Freedmen, their future. do a warm in his man and Judge Reade !!

According to previous notice, a large and attentive audience, consisting of members of the Convention, citigens, ladies and soldiers, assembled last night in the Commons Hall, to hear the address of Gen. O O. Howard. The General was introduced by Gov. Holden.

The General proceeded to address the Convention. He begged leave to assure them that he came with the kindest intentions for the purpose of doing practical good to the white man as well as the freedman. That he had endeavored to carry out faithfully the instructions of the Presi dent, and that all his circulars had been submitted to and approved by him. He was now on a tour to South-Oi rolina. In passing, he thought that good might be accomplished by addressing the Convention of North-Carolina He was glad of the opportunity to do so.

He had been handed the report of the Committee upon Freedmen. He asked leave to read it, as it so nearly co. incided with his own views and purposes, which were to establish some system of local laws, whereby social order might prevail and the evils resulting from a sudden change in the status of society be averted. The General read the report. [See it in another column.] He commended the course therein recommended. He looked with interest to the action of the Convention, and future legislation on this matter. He had confidence enough to believe that it would be sufficient in time to rectify all evils. But he feared that no laws gould be passed or go in force before the first of January next, owing to the necessity of thor. ough legislation in the matter. It was necessary, be thought, that before that time that some local courts should be established, say three Justices in each County, who should settle all differences arising between the whites and blacks, and enforce law and order. He had no doubt but that any County could thus regulate its affairs and impose order and quiet upon all classes of its citizens, Alabama and Mississippi had pursued this course, and he now made the suggestion to the members of the Convention of North-Carolins, that they should adopt some similar method He hoved that he was understood-he desired on y the good of the people.

The General said that the Freedman's Bureau thus far had accomplished all it could. No persons were sustained in idieness, and vagrancy about cities was diminish ng In this it had accomplished its purpose to break the shock of the sudden revolution in society and labor. He did not come to advocate equality—merely to make prac-tical suggestions and further a solution of the difficulties under which we labored.

The Bureau would probably exist one year, probably longer. It had no means at hand and this was the reawere assigned to this duty, because they could draw their sy as such officers. He would have preferred upright, intelligent citizens for this duty, but his means had been limited. As soon as North Carolina was restored to the Union, the freedmen would be turned over to her care .-This is where the matter properly rests. In the meanwhile, he came to co-operate with citizens of the State in the endeavor to establish local courts for the adjudication of all difficulties between the races, until the Bureau ceased to exist and the State took the charge upon ber-

The General also referred to and enforced the necessity of schools to disseminate intelligence and virtue among the freed children. He thought no discipline better for them than that of the school room.

In closing the General reiterated his kind feelings, and said that he would like to hear facts and suggestions from some of the members present. After a short pause, the audience called on General

Dockery. The call was repeated, when the delegate from Richmond arose and addressed them. GER, DOCKERT'S BPERCH He said that he was loth to address the assembly, when so many more able than himself were present, but as General Howard had called for facts and information, he would give him such as he had. He came from the South-Carolina line, from a County lying on the Pedee. He always had a kind feeling for the negroes. They had nursed him and had nursed his children This kind attachment still existed. He was disposed, there. fore, to do the negro justice. He believed that the State of North Carolina had been abolitionized by the war, and that the people would do them justice. But the negro did not now rightfully comprehend his situation. He had many crude ideas of liberty He thought liberty consisted in the privilege of roaming wherever he wished and cessation from labor Vagrancy was a great misfortune The negroes wandered off to the cities, searching for a crowd. Some came back with marvellous tales, and rendered whole neighborhoods dissatisistied Besides, the men did not seem disposed to support their families. They would not work, and the women and children could not support themselves. In conjunction with mean, demoralized white men, they had committed many depredations on stock and property. stealing cotton, and killing hogs and sheep. In support of what he said, the General cited many instances of his own personal knowledge.

He said that now the prevailing question in the country was what to do with the negro. In old times it required all the energy of the master to make a living on the wornout lands of Lis country, and now that the negroes would not work, no living at all could be made. Were they to be driven away like the Red Men, or should they be allowed to die in our vards from starvation? He did not believe that our people would allow them to starve, but they would not work, and what was to be done? In his County there were scarcely enough provisions to last through next Spring, and he feared that these Freedmen who had now become consumers and non-producers would suffer

He said that in coming through Wilmington he had waited on Gen. Crook, and asked for the organization of a local police in his County. Since that time he had learned that a detachment of negro troops had been sent there. He deplored this He thought the negroes would look upon them as protectors, and would soon commit some act to test whether they would be upheld in depre-dations on the whites. He had much rather preferred a home organization or a white guard

After some other remarks by Mr Dockery,

GEN. BOWARD Arose, and said that what Gen Dockery had said strengthened him in the belief of the pecessity o local courts, such as he had referred to That he had a so received a new idea, If upon the old wornout lands of Gen. Dockery's County the negro could scarcely make a living when a slave, and none now that he was left to himse f, what would be his fate if left to himself in a new country?

He would ask gentlemen if it were not a sulcidal policy to remove the whole working population from a County? If labor could be regulated, would it not be better that it should be kept at home? He referred to some of the French Islands of the West Indies as an example where free megro labor was properly regulated.

IN SEPLE Gen. Bockery wished to know if negro children could be apprenticed, and to what extent.

GEN HOWARD

Said shat they could, to the same extent that white chil-

Said Gen. Dockery, relieves us of a world of trouble. THE HON, B. G READS Was next called upon. He asked leave to assure General

Howard that his kind y feelings were properly understand and appreciated. That he was from the Northern border of the State, his friend Gen Deckery from the Southern He knew that his friend would bear him out in the assertion that under the old system, a cruel and a bard master was a rare thing in North Carolina. That there was up attachment between master and slave in North-Carolina under the old system, which the war our the ordinance passed by this Convention could dissolve. He believed, herefore, the in no district of North-Carolina could a freedman be imposed upon. His former master would not allow it when appealed to, but would protect him. Such was his opinion.

He did not think himself a better master than otherwal his neighbors. He had award but low slaves, some thirty or farty. Yes there were members of his family to whom, in the whole course of his life, he had never spoken an urkind word: Therefore, he thought, shar were this matter left to the people of the State it would be justly and properly regulated. The intelligent people, and he begged leave to assure the General that our people were intelligent, would do it better than the Freedman's Bureau, because they knew what was best. There were some difficulties with the negroes, some misund-ratanding, but the people could regulate these things better than the agents of the Bureau

Wallinger, Steamboat Lines on

Wished to know if he thought that the agents had caused sby of these difficulties.

Thought that they had. Their instructions to the negroes had been given, be doubted not, in good faith. But their instructions were to the negroes to go to work, and if their employees did not pay them, they would see that it was done. This fostered the belief that agents of the Buread were better friends than their former mosters, and made the proces distrustful. Besides, white men had been brought from his County on the declaration of freedmen, whether aworn or not be did not know, and put in iail here to be tried. This also created bud feeling In conclusion the Judge again reiterated his assurance to Gen. Howard that the Convention fully appreclated his good purposes,

General Howard made a few remarks, repeating succinctly what he had said, and impressing upon the minds of the members of the Convention the necessity for some action on the anbject.

Nors -This report was made up without notes, entirely from memory. If ony of the distinguished gentlemen have been misrepresented, or their meaning not fully explained, it will be a pleasure to tublish their speeches entire, or currect the error.

Mail Irregularities.

Complaints constantly come to us of the irregularity of the Mails, especially from points off the lines of Bailroad. For these irregularities we are not responsible, as the paper is regularly mailed at this office and sent to the cars for the different roads in time to go off every day. A correspondent at Manson, N. C., says that the Standard does not reach that place as regularly as it should. We cannot account for this; for although there are no mail Agents on that line, the authorities of the Road and their employees have been supplying the service for months, much to the convenience of those living in the Counties through which it passes. An Agent is row going over the routes in the State for the purpose of regulating mail matters. and we hope soon to have the benefits of his efforts in the more certain transmission of mail matter throughout the State.

A Bit of a Row.

A dispute and wrangle occurred near the N. C. Depot ust night, between a negro man by the name of Rose Powell and three or four soldiers, in which the negro seemed to have the best of it, rocks and other missiles being used on both sides to the endangerment of persons passing in the vicinity. The soldiers retired but soon reurned with re-in orcements, when the negro was again attacked, and we learn, very seriously if not mortally beaten. One of the soldiers, on leaving, was heard to say "d-n him, he is dead " We heard that the difficulty originated, or was in some way connected with one of the colored fair sex.

The Question, The Question.

If every one who has money or the means of raising money, goes into trade and speculation thereon, who will be left to pay the expected profits? The old supply of cotton and Tobacco will soon all be in ma ket and the proceeds invested in some way -there is very little of these products cultivated this year, so that the influx of money will cease after a little while, nutit another year's crop shall be ready for market. It would be well for people to look to these facts and in fime avoid difficulties
