1 - infantile repose. It was thus that Lilburn elby first saw his promised wife. He had just driven up to the gate, and, cracking his whip menacingly at the dogs who came baying toward him, he ascended the steps, calling, in an imperious, boyish

"Where is your master, Libby?" " Massa's taking his nap, I reckon, sir, on le sofa in de library."

But the young man had caught sight of t e child in her arms and come slowly to-"That's Miss Lulu, is it?" he asked.

"Yes, sir," answered Libby, smiling Shelby smiled, too, a little warm color oming into his swart cheek; then, as he lifted one little pearly hand, he blushed edly, and, half turning away, snapped his sagers at the old hound fawning upon him, and asked: " When did she come?"

"Last night, sir. Isn't she a beauty, Massa Shelby ?" " Very pretty child. I suppose I ought to put my mark or ownership upon her;" and he bent and kissed the fairy baby-face, then carned and sprang through the long, open window into the house. The little orphan heiress of the Paytons slumiered on, unconscious of the destiny which claimed her. For it had long been desired by the heads of the two old families that their heirs should wed. At the birth of this little grand daughter of the Paytons, she had been betrethed, by letter, to the only son of the Shelbys, Lilburn, then nineteen years of age. Thus the two first Sixteen years later, how much was changed! The master of Payton Lawns was dead; the child was its beautiful mistress; Lilburn Shelby was abroad, Toat summer he came home, a darkbrowed man of thirty five. There was hardly a trace in him of the impulsive boy who, sixteen years before, had kissed the infant, unless the old imperiousness was preserved, as seemed likely, when he suddenly ordered the coachman to stop upon a hill overlooking Payton Lawns.

"How are they all there, Morris?" "Old man's dead, sir."

" Yes, I know." "Old servant's dead?"
