THE WAR.

The war still drags its slow length along. The hole campaign of the allies has been hitherto multicted in the most masterly manner, on Mr, alboun's principle of "masterly inactivity." he strong allied fleet in the Black Sea has not an taken Odessa, a great depot of provisions a finasian arroles, and which they might made a depot for their own. They elained time ago to have allenced the fortifications ass. . . by did they not take the town ? nf Odosaa. ... hy did they not take the town ? Why have they since taken it ? It is not a strong position like Schustopol, yet it is an important position as a grsin deput to the power which holds it. Why not take it then? Why are the allied armies so alow in reaching the Radici ? What is Sir Charles Nasion doing in the Baltic the Baltie for the first time? Did not the great military men of France and England know as well when Napier's fleet sailed as they know now, that the Russian fortreeses in the Baltic coald not be reliased without a land force, or, if the barren of results, unless there were a land be barren of results, unless there were a land at were practicable, that each a vicery would barren of results, unless there were a land ree to follow up the advantage gained by the sets? There is no explanation of the most mys-rices, unpresidented, unbeard of dilatorices-ess and delays of the allies except upon the unceition which we summet is correct that position which we suspect is correct, that are alraid of the efforts of a real war upon by are alraid of the effects of a real wer upon a popular element in Europe. The Czar, with dread of incorrection himself, has the power axining incorrection all over Europe, and its is power, and the knowledge that his enemies a sware of the fact and tremble at it, which we him such amazing confidence and obstinacy.
