LITERARY MESSENGER. T. W. White, respectfully informs the patrons of the "Southern Literary Messenger," and the public generally, that the issue of the next No. of that periodical is necessarily delayed beyond the usual time of publication. The recent holidays, and s damage which has occurred to the press on which the Messenger is struck off, have retarded the busi ness of his office. He would further mention, that the publishing of an important essay upor the "Rights of the Slave-holding States, and the owners of slave property, under the Constitution of the United States," from the pen of Conway Robinson, Esq., of this city, has also postponed the appearance of the Messenger. He believes, however, that the value and interest of this paper wil fully atone for the delay Being anxious to present the whole essay at the same time to the pub tic, and aware that the issue of his periodical would be late for the mouth of January, he has concluded to publish the January and February numbers together. His patrons will, therefore, receive a double number, or the numbers for two months under one cover. The publisher flatters himself, that both in typographical and literary excellence the two coming numbers will equal, if not exceed any that he has ever given to the public.
