The action of Georgia on the subject of the fall elections in that State-that is, rethe House parties were so nearly divided trary will, the Standard uses this language: that upon the calling of the roll, it appeared that the Senator's resolution was rejected only by one vote; but several members change.

If Judge Brooks ready to involve the people of North Carolina in civil war? Does he suppose Governor Holden will recede before him? * * The Governor will not recede unly by one vote; but several members changed their votes, and the resolution was deci- til the Federal Army is used against him; and dadly rejected. We suspect that the weak-

Georgia has suffered from her own blunblunder was made the pretext. Yet, notwithstanding the bitter temper of Congress at the beginning of its session last winter to wards her, she escaped wonderfully. General Grant, indeed, urged Congress to impose the iron-clad oath upon her people because the majority in her Legislature had expelled the negroes elected to that budy.— Congress was appeared by the restoration of the negroes and the expulsion of those white members not eligible under the fourteenth amendment (which greatly altered the political complexion of the body), and intimated the willingness of the Federal Government to allow the Georgiaus to go ahead and elect new officers in the fall without further reguirements. But Bullock and his partisans wanted to hold on to office, and favored postponing the State election for two years, in which they were defeated.

Thus far, then, things in the South move encouragingly, and we are much nearer peace and equality than at any other period since the war .- Richmond Dispatch.
