DR. EVANS GIVES CHARMING LECTURE

(Special to The Star.) The Renaissance Study club held its regular meeting Monday afternoon at 3:30 at the home of Mrs. Willis McMurry. Dr. Evans, a member of Limestone college faculty who is giving a series of lectures to the club on contemporary writers, spoke on Browning. Dr. Evans, an Englishman by birth, is an outstanding scholar, possessing a rich, mental, cultural background. He holds his audience spellbound with his excellent diction and a deep, full understanding of his subject. Much has been said about the difficulty of reading Browning. It is true he is often obscure. Probably the most obscure of all his works is Sardello.

Browning possessed a rapacious mind. The Ring and the Book was suggested to him by an old yellow book which he picked up in Florence. This poem is his longest and some think his greatest.

Among the poems which carry a deeper message are Ripa Passes, Saul, Rabbi Ben Ezra and Prospero. His meeting with Elizabeth Barrett was the beginning of the most beautiful romance in literary history. Browning believed that love is the dynamo of the universe and that a loveless life is a dead life.

Dr. Evans subject for his next lecture will be Ibsen's Peer Gynt and Brandt. Mrs. Evans was a guest of the club and Miss Foye Moore the guest of Mrs. J. C. Eskridge.

After the lecture the hostess served refreshments.

After the educational program was completed the students enjoyed a number of contests suggestive of "Halloween."

Refreshments were served and decorations carried out in Halloween colors and emblems.

The following students have entered the School of Nursing for the Preliminary Period and will become members of the Journal Club: Miss Margie Annas, Lenoir; Miss Naomi Alexander, Pickens, S. C.; Miss Audrey Crawford, Chesterfield, S. C.; Miss Ruby Dellinger, Cherryville; Miss Lucille Eddins, Wadesboro; Miss Mary Hamrick, Beaverville; Miss Susan Jones, Lewisville; Miss Rebecca Torrence, Cornelius; Miss Francis Weathers, Shelby; Miss Nell Willis, Belwood.

Senator Couzens Was In Position To Incite Envy

By PRESTON GROVER WASHINGTON.—(AP)—If ever there was a member of congress who enjoyed his wealth it was the late senator James Couzens of Michigan.

He enjoyed it because figuratively it enabled him to thumb his nose at any one on earth and remain fearless of political punishment. Almost as his last political gesture he thumbed his nose at his own state's Republican organization, endorsed President Roosevelt, and took the licking in the primary he probably expected.

He made his wealth growing up with Henry Ford in the automobile business. He broke with Ford and soon was in politics.

Switched Horses Often Charting his course in the senate is like mapping the flight of a bee, particularly if you try to associate him with any one group or show him subject to any one influence.

He voted with the New Deal often, against it often; some times with the progressives, some times against. Once in the quiet of his office last spring he told of urging his colleague, Senator Vandenberg, to remain out of the presidential race in 1936, to save himself until 1940. He gave two reasons:

He thought 1936 was a bad year for Republicans and that Vandenberg, if nominated, would be "wasted." He thought also Vandenberg was developing into somewhat of a liberal, and four years more seasoning in that philosophy would make him a more acceptable candidate.

Why He Stayed Republican That situation may explain why Couzens, while endorsing Roosevelt, chose to remain a Republican.

He built not a single outstanding legislative monument to himself, just the record of a rich man with a liberal mind voting his own ideas.
