MADRID FIGHTS 40-BLOCK FIRE

MADRID, Nov. 11.—(AP)—Madrid's defenders controlled a damaging 40-block fire and filled their battered fortifications at the city's edge with thousands of Catalan reinforcements under a new stream of insurgent shell fire today.
Their machine guns, tuned to offensive tempo, sprayed death across the shallow Manzanares river at Moors, insurgent legionnaires and Fascist blackshirts. Their artillery held the rebels to the south and west under one of the heaviest bombardments since the World war.

It also menaced the former royal palace and damaged military buildings in the vicinity of the station. The cause was undetermined—some said an accident; others blamed air bombs or shells from insurgent batteries.
New shells today fell near the ministry of marine and crashed into other sections across the river from the insurgent batteries.

He also declared there were a considerable number of Germans and Italians serving in technical posts with the insurgents, government officers said.
