"Heavenly Guest" Dr. Wall's Theme

"The Heavenly Guest," will be the subject of Dr. Zeno Wall, in the service at the First Baptist Church, on next Sunday morning at 11:00 o'clock.

The day's activities at the Church will open with the Sunday School at 9:30 o'clock. Much work is being done to exceed last Sunday's attendance of eight hundred and fourteen.

In the evening at 6:30 o'clock, the twenty-two Unions will meet for their programs. These organizations which comprise the Training Union, invite every member of the family in the Church constituency.

At 7:30 o'clock, Dr. Wall will use as his subject, "John's Christian." This will be the fourth message in a series on "The Christian life. According to Interpretations of Various Authors." Every member of the choir is asked to be present this evening at the Church at 7:30 o'clock for rehearsal to plan music for all services.

New Yorkers Build Little 'Utopia' of Individualism

The spirit of back-to-the-soil rugged individualism is exemplified at Suffern, N. Y., where a small community of 40 acres, started in 1935 by Ralph Borsodi, is making good on its own. Upper left photo shows community tenants building one of the many substantial homes, while the one upper right shows a woman member of the community weaving clothing materials. Women in the colony are taught to manage a home, put up fruits and vegetables, and sew and weave. The whole theory of the colony is utilization of the assets at hand. Welsh Jobless Complain Of Their Lot In Note To King

CWMBRAN, Wales, Nov. 20.—(AP)—An open letter from Welsh Jobless, asking: "Will an impoverished people be able to joyfully celebrate your majesty's coronation?" was given to King Edward of England today.

The letter, first handed to one of the King's aides in Cwmbrian before the start of his second day tour of the Bleak Wales mining districts, came to Edward's personal attention when, after luncheon, the chairman of the Blaenavon town council told him about it.

"Where is it?" the king demanded. "I want to read it."

The chairman handed Edward a copy. He read it and stuffed it in his pocket.

The letter appealed for a "higher living standard, work and wages" for "thousands of willing hands so eagerly waiting."

Inspecting headquarters of the committee for the jobless at Blaenavon, the King promised an attempt to ease the unemployment situation.

Turning to the chairman of the committee, he said: "Something will be done about unemployment."

The letter said: "We regret that your tour has been planned in such a way that the terrible effects of poverty will not be seen by your majesty."

"This is a stricken valley—a valley blighted by the dead hand of poverty."

"Young men up to 25 years old have been denied a chance of ever getting a day's work."

"Our women grow prematurely old and many are broken in the unequal fight against the consequences of unending penury."

"The bodies of our children are stunted and frail because adequate nourishment cannot be obtained."

"Family life has been shattered by the cruel means test (dole test). The poorest of the poor now are to be subjected by your government to another vicious attack x x x we would respectfully ask your majesty how a suffering people can believe the talk of prosperity? Will an impoverished people be able to joyfully celebrate your majesty's coronation?"

Throughout the day, the King was wildly acclaimed.

Bermuda Grass, Once A Curse, Now A Blessing

COLLEGE STATION, Raleigh, Nov. 20.—Bermuda grass, once considered a curse of farm land, is now recognized as a valuable ally in controlling soil erosion and in supplying pasture grazings.

Before farmers realized the evils of erosion, in the days when cultivated fields were taken as signs of good farming, the fast-spreading Bermuda grass gave farmers many a headache, and backache too.

The farmer who let this grass spread over his land was ridiculed as lazy, shiftless, and incompetent. But those days are gone. Now many farmers plant Bermuda grass not only for its feed value as a pasture but also to control erosion on sloping land.

In a report to Dean I. O. Schaub, of State college, K. A. Haney, assistant farm agent in Madison county, told of the good results being obtained by H. K. Ramsey on his steep hillside fields.

On one field where the grass has been growing for years, there are several bad gullies above the grassy area, but they end abruptly when they reach the grass. Where Bermuda grows, the field is smooth-surfaced and covered with rich topsoil.

Ramsey also grows corn on hill-sides with little loss from erosion. By plowing so the furrows are thrown up the hill instead of down, as is a frequent practice, he helps keep the soil worked up hill every time he plows the land.

He plants Bermuda grass roots in his corn. From the time the corn is last cultivated until it is ready for harvest, the grass will grow to a height of 12 or 16 inches, with its matted roots holding the soil in place.

Bermuda grass will spread down hill rapidly, but will not spread up hill very well. So Ramsey plants the grass roots at the top of the fields and allows it to spread downward.

HOW'S your HEALTH

Boils And Their Prevention

The human skin normally has present upon its germs of the staphylococcus variety. These germs belong to the cocci group—that is, they are spherical in shape and usually are to be seen collected in bunches of irregular shape. They are to be distinguished from the streptococci, which belong to the same general class, but usually are found in long chain formations.

The staphylococci are commonly responsible for the infectious conditions of the skin, such as boils, abscesses, carbuncles and pimples. In these conditions the responsible germ is usually of the staphylococcus aureus type. "Aureus" describes the yellow pus the germs produce.

The relationship of the normal staphylococcus inhabitant of the skin to the aureus variety found in pustular disease is not yet clear. Staphylococcal infections of the skin usually develop around a hair follicle. Depending upon the site, the intensity and multiplicity of the infection, there may result a boil, sty or carbuncle. A single boil may develop, run its course and be cured without the subsequent appearance of another. Not infrequently, however, one boil is followed by another, and a whole series is suffered.

The prevention of the recurrence of boils depends upon the adequate treatment of the first boil and on the elimination of a variety of contributing conditions. Local mechanical friction in the region of the boil should be avoided. This includes hot applications, mechanical appliances and infected clothing. The skin should be kept clean of dirt and oil by washing it frequently with warm water and soap.

Foci of infection such as dental abscesses, diseased tonsils, infected head sinuses, should be eliminated. The urine should be examined for the presence of sugar, and if necessary a blood examination should be made to determine whether the patient is suffering from diabetes or hyperglycemia (the presence of an excessive amount of sugar in the blood). Anemia and malnutrition, by lowering body resistance, frequently contribute to the development of boils. Anxiety and overwork, adversely affecting the physical condition of the individual, may also contribute to lowering of resistance to skin infections.

Exposure of the body to sunlight and to ultraviolet radiation apparently raises the resistance of the skin to staphylococcus infection. Ultraviolet radiation and X-ray have proved beneficial methods for treating boils, and contribute to the prevention of the recurrence of this condition.

Roosevelt Plans To Travel Through South Carolina On His Way To Georgia Resort

President Very Much Interested In Announced Wage Increases; Will Return To Charleston December 14

CHARLESTON, S. C., Nov. 20.—(AP)—Governor Olin D. Johnston said President Roosevelt told him before sailing Wednesday for South America that he would disembark here Dec. 14 on his return trip and go immediately to Warm Springs, Ga.

The Governor said the President indicated he would travel by train to Columbia, and motor from there to Macon, Ga., in order to grant Johnston's expressed wish that the people of Central South Carolina might have an opportunity to see and greet the chief executive.

Chats With Johnston

The President and the governor chatted for some time immediately after the President's arrival to board the cruiser Indianapolis.

Johnston said Mr. Roosevelt indicated he had been up early reading the morning newspapers.

"Hello there Olin," the President greeted the governor as he entered the private car. Happy birthday and may you have many of them," The governor was 40 years old Wednesday.

How is Mrs. Johnston and that fine son," asked Mr. Roosevelt.

With a broad smile came the reply, he will be big enough by January to attend your inauguration."

Happy Over Wage Boost

The President expressed great satisfaction over news in the morning press that a widespread movement for wage increases had gotten under way in the Carolina Textile industry, and over South Carolina's record breaking vote in his behalf two weeks ago yesterday.

"And by the way," Johnston said the President asked, "what was the final percentage? Who won, South Carolina or Mississippi?"

His reference was to a wager of a donkey between the Lieutenant Governors of the two states over which commonwealth would give the President a larger percentage of its vote. Johnston explained that South Carolina's vote, with returns from four counties missing, was 98.4 per cent and that the donkey had been presented by Mississippi to Chairman James A. Farley of the Democratic national committee.

Johnston said the President, asked to visit Central South Carolina, inquired the mileage between Columbia and Macon and said he thought he would take a motor trip between the two towns by way of Augusta, Ga.

"I told him I had that mileage right at my fingertips, because of
