FARMERS TO FACE COMPETITION IN FOREIGN MARKETS

Crop Is Larger Than Last Year Says Dean Schaub

COLLEGE STATION, Raleigh, Dec. 2.—The American cotton farmer in 1936-37 will face greater foreign competition than ever before if the production of this year's crop comes up to present expectations.

According to a forecast supplied Dean I. O. Schaub, of N. C. State College, by the U. S. Department of Agriculture, foreign production this season is expected to total 17,500,000 bales, or 1,600,000 bales more than last year's record crop.

Such a crop would exceed the United States crop by 5,000,000 bales or 51 per cent. During the 10 year period ending with the 1932-33 season, the domestic crop exceeded that of foreign countries by 3,200,000 bales.

Big Carry-Over

Although consumption is expected to increase, it probably will not keep up with the rise in world production, and the world carry-over into the 1937-1938 crop year is expected to be larger than that of August 1, 1936.

The supply of United States cotton for domestic and world markets is smaller than last year, the forecast stated, but indications are that the next year's crop in this country may expand enough to more than offset the reduction in this year's American carry-over.

The increase in domestic and foreign supply would tend to lower prices in all markets. However, it might be offset, to some extent, as far as local farmers are concerned, by an increase in demand for American cotton or a rise in the general price level, the dean pointed out.

The advisability of increasing exports of American cotton depends largely on the prices for which it can be sold in world markets over a period of years, and whether these prices will return the growers a profit above the cost of production.

The guests were then invited into the dining room where refreshments were served from a pretty silver table bearing candles in silver holders which lent a pleasing light to the room.

About fifty members and a few invited guests enjoyed the occasion.

HURRIES TO GET WINTER HEAVIES

Weighty Prophet Loses 40 Pounds, Hears Of Heavier One

BOAZ, Ala., Dec. 2.—(P)—Winter starts today on Sand mountain because Walter Cagle, 525-pound weather prophet and harbinger of the cold season, is coming to town for his heavy flannels.

Walt took one look at the weather while he sat in his home at Mount-ainboro, four miles from here, and said he and Mrs. Cagle would stay in Boaz only a few hours.

"The weather will be too bad," he said, "to stay longer, but we won't have snow today, rain is more like it."

Back in August, Walt issued his annual winter forecast. "Zero weather by Christmas," he said, "and a long, hard winter."

Official weather reports for November, first chilly month in North Alabama, bore him out. The average temperature was nearly three degrees per day below normal, and one snow flurry visited the hills last week.

Mayor Denson Bynum will give Walter the keys to the city, when he arrives via truck. Then he will buy 24 yards of heavy flannels, to be made into underwear, a pair of size 13 shoes and a pair of size 74 overalls.

TALK TO PARENTS

Tell Me A Story!

By BROOKE PETERS CHURCH

This has been the child's repeated request for thousands of years — not "read me a story"—anyone can do that—but "tell me a story."

There is something personal about a story which is told to a child. It is his story, adjusted to his age and taste. It belongs to him as no story read from a book can.

Reaching from the tidewater belt in the east through the piedmont counties and into the mountains, the State is surpassed by few if any others in the variety of its soil types, climatic conditions, geological formations, and natural vegetation, he added.

These great varieties in physical conditions mean that in the State agriculture faces many hazards and has many different opportunities for land use.

Past usage has depleted much of the land of its natural cover and fertility. The problem now is: How can depleted lands be reclaimed economically for profitable use? How can the better lands be used to advantage while conserving them for future generations?

In the solution of this problem, in its various aspects, the Experiment Station has been surveying and studying land areas of the State, determining uses for which different lands are suited best, developing better cultural practices, and working out effective methods of soil conservation.

Where Money Is Coming From Is A Great Mystery

NEWPORT, Ky., Dec. 2.—(P)—Newport police and jail attendants sat on edge today, waiting for Sam Malusch, a 75-year old prisoner, to conjure up more money, possibly as much as $300 to $500.

True, said Sgt. W. J. Ulrich, a whole 24 hours had passed since Malusch was found reclining on his cell-cot, idly flipping a 50-cent piece into the air, his foot beating time to a lustily-whistled tune.

Before that, even periodic searches failed to lessen his ability to produce five and ten dollar bills — each time with a request "for cigarettes."

The little bent and bearded figure smilingly protested as officers searched even his underwear.

Then came Alex Malusch, a brother residing in nearby Cold Springs, Ky., to visit him. Mystified patrolmen told their story.

"Stuaks," he told Chief Leo Livingston, "Sam should have between $300 and $500."

PRETENDER DRAWING ENGLISH ATTENTION

LONDON, Dec. 2.—(P)—Anthony Hall, former policeman who, as pretender to the British throne, calls himself "King Anthony the First," warned the Duke of Norfolk today to go to King Edward's coronation "at your own peril."

"Know this also," Hall told the highest peer in all Britain, "that the heads of those who take part in the 'coronation' of any person not of royal blood shall fly like chaff in the wind."

The 28-year-old Duke, who as Earl Marshall will be stage manager of the coronation next Spring, received the injunction without comment.

Hall, a former police inspector in the Shropshire Constabulary, bases his claim for the throne on alleged direct descent from the Tudors. He recently signed a proclamation returning the long-lost American "colonies" to English sovereignty.
