The grand champion steer weighed 995 pounds when he was judged, and on that basis the Oklahoma A. and M. college, Stillwater, owner, had $2,985 to tuck away with its royal purple ribbon.

Sights And Sounds

By ROBIN COONS

Eleanor Powell, who was "Born to Dance," clicks her soles and heels through much of the footage of this new, elaborate musical comedy about a girl and a small-town girl who wanted to make the big time grade.

It is smart and effective clicking, surrounded at all times by the beauty or talent (or both) of a cast including Virginia Bruce, James Stewart, Buddy Ebsen, Una Merkel, Sid Silvers, Frances Langford, Alan Dinehart, Raymond Walburn and others.

Everybody sings and everybody dances, gags and comedy situations abound, and it winds up with a huge "production number" in the current mode. Made for fun, "Born to Dance" should give it. Roy del Ruth directed, and the music is Cole Porter's.

The Dionne quintuplets make their second feature bow in "Reunion," which is about the big get-together of the 3,000 "babies" delivered by Dr. Luke (Jean Hersholt) of "The Country Doctor" fame. The reunion affords the good doctor opportunity to straighten, rather cleverly, the tangled lives of several of his grown up "babies"—including Robert Kent, whose romance with Rochelle Hudson is threatened by Helen Vinson, who is about to leave her husband Tom Moore; Alan Dinehart, the great governor who is childless and little George Ernest who is parentless. Esther Ralston plays the down-and-out movie star, and J. Edward Bromberg, her faithful old home town admirer.

Throughout these stories Constable Slim Summerville and Quintuplet Papa John Allen provide consistent comedy and there are, of course, the quint doing two-year-old stunts. Norman Taurog directed.

Bing Crosby put some of his own money into "Pennies from Heaven" and it looks as if he'll get it back with interest. It's about a troubadour who "adopts" an indigent grandpa (Donald Meek) and his "problem grandchild" (Edith Fellows) and runs into all sorts of difficulties with social service workers. One of these is Madge Evans who eventually joins the side of the hunted refugee and gets her man—but not before Crosby has sung some good tunes and untangled himself from consistent troubles.

Louis Armstrong, the negro maestro is a hit. Norman MacLeod directed. In "It Happened One Night" Clark Gable, a reporter, captured runaway heiress Claudette Colbert and returned her via night bus to romance, with astonishing box-office results. In "Love on the Run" Gable again is the reporter, but Joan Crawford is the proud heiress.

Gable helps Joan escape from marriage with fortune-hunting Ivan Lebedeff, and in the escape they do a glorified hitch-hike over quite a bit of Europe. Franchot Tone as a rival reporter has nearly as good a role as either. W. S. Van Dyke directed.

Ear Complications And Throat Infections

Infection of the throat always threatens a number of serious complications. Among them are involvement of the middle ear and the head sinuses. Also, the case which may begin as a simple sore throat may later turn out to be what is known as an acute streptococcal infection of the throat, with numerous threatened complications, involving the immediate structures of the throat, as well as the heart and kidneys.

We frequently find preceding an involvement of the middle ear such illness as the common cold, influenza, tonsillitis or sinusitis. In summer time bathing in polluted waters may contribute to the development of the condition. Occasionally exposure to cold and damp may be the precipitating cause of middle ear disease.

In ear disease following respiratory infection, it is usual for the infection to extend along the Eustachian tube. This is the tube which runs from the back of the throat to the middle ear. The function of the tube is to allow air to enter the internal ear structure, so that the pressure against the ear drum from the inside will be equal to that of the outside air pressure.

Those suffering from enlarged adenoids and enlarged and diseased tonsils, as well as those who have what are called septic foci in the nose and sinuses about the nose are the more likely to suffer middle ear infection.

In acute streptococcal infection of the throat (streptococcal because the streptococcus germ is the most common organism responsible) we may find an inflammation of the tonsils and of more or less of the surrounding tissue. In the more serious form, the involved tissues may become gangrenous, that is, they succumb (are killed) by the germs and their toxins.

In the second form, we often also find constitutional evidence of toxemia and septicemia, that is, the germs and their toxins apparently succeed in breaking through the local protective barriers and enter the blood circulation. The second form of throat infection may develop out of the first. Such cases require very prompt and competent medical care.

Middle ear disease may extend and involve the mastoid, while the gangrenous form of throat infection, giving rise to toxic and septicemic symptoms, may cause irreparable damage to the kidneys and heart.

Throat infections are therefore not quite the simple conditions that many are inclined to think. Many a chronic nephritis, rheumatoid arthritis and rheumatic heart involvement date from an attack of acute septic sore throat.

TALK TO PARENTS

Horace Mann By BROOKE PETERS CHURCH

This year we are celebrating the centennial of one of the world's great leaders in education, Horace Mann. To many people he is simply a name, and yet he was one of the great influences in the development of the American school system.

The pioneers who settled this country some 300 years ago realized the value of education. Scarcely had they built shelters for themselves and churches in which to worship, than they turned their attention to building schoolhouses and founding colleges. Coming from a world where education was granted only to the privileged few, they made it one of their first duties, they made it here it was available to all.

To them, education was a finite thing, the same yesterday, today and tomorrow. So, having built their schoolhouses and installed their teachers they turned their attention to making a living and left education to go on for generations under the impetus of the original drive.

Two hundred years later, Horace Mann was amazed and shocked to find that since pioneer days education in this country had stood almost still. The same old schoolhouses, the same kind of teachers, the same studies were still continuing. For 11 years, he preached and urged reforms in the system, and much of the progress in the schools of today is due to his labors and his teaching.

But we need more of his spirit abroad in the land. The parents of America are too prone to "leave it to George" in the matter of schools. Impressed by their beautiful and well equipped school buildings, they neglect to inquire what kind of teaching the children get, how adequate a preparation for life they are given. They pour out money on the school plant, forgetting that bricks and mortar cannot of themselves teach and inspire the young.

DORIS PLANS TO HAVE HOME IN HONOLULU

HONOLULU, Dec. 4.—(AP)—Mrs. Doris Duke Cromwell after a swim in "sissy" waves, said today she still plans to build a half-million dollar winter home here, now that the swimming pool problem apparently is settled.

The tobacco fortune heiress arrived yesterday from San Francisco on the Japanese liner Asama Maru and went to Waikiki beach for a dip. The "water was fine but the waves too sissy" for surf-board riding.

After the Honolulu harbor board refused permission to the Cromwells to build a beach-front swimming pool on their estate, they acquired adjoining property which contained a pool.

Mrs. Cromwell said she expected her husband to join her in January.
